Cosmic handshake order of the day

Thomas Stafford, right, greets Alexei Leonov in docking tunnel

By EDWARD K. DeLONG
UPI Space Writer

HOUSTON (UPI) — With a historic linkup sealed by a handshake, three Americans and two Russians orbited the earth Thursday as "courageous conquerors of space" in a ship hailed as the forerunner of international space stations.

The tandem flight by astronauts Thomas Stafford, Vance Brand and Donald "Deke" Slayton in a U.S. Apollo and cosmonauts Alexei Leonov and Valeri Kubasov in a Soviet Soyuz ended 18 years of space race rivalry and launched a new era of cooperative exploration beyond the realm of earth.

"May our joint work serve for the benefit of all countries and peoples on the earth," Stafford told the Russians.

But the mission also demonstrated at times the special sort of problems that can occur when men of different nations fly their spaceships together.

A minor docking tunnel leak led to discovery of safety limit discrepancies in the Soyuz and Apollo flight plans.

The use of Soviet radio frequencies led to interference from aircraft towers in the United States. And camera troubles prevented all the planned telecasts from Soyuz of Thursday's linkup and visit.

Stafford started the first international meeting in space at 3:19 p.m. EDT by swinging open a round hatch door, welcoming Leonov into the Apollo and grasping his hand.

"Hello. Very happy to see you," Stafford said in Russian as Leonov stuck his shoulders through the tunnel linking the two vehicles.

"This is Soyuz and the United States," Leonov replied in English as their hands met.

Then Stafford and Slayton joined Leonov and Kubasov around a table in the Russian ship to break bread, sip borscht, sign certificates and accept high praise from leaders of both their nations. Brand remained alone in Apollo keeping watch over the linked spacecraft.

The historic visit went so well it lasted more than twice as long as the planned 2 hours, 12 minutes. Stafford and Slayton did not return to Apollo until 6:51 p.m.

Both crews tried to get back on schedule, but the hatch leak difficulties further delayed them. It was 8:35 p.m., more than an hour behind schedule, when Stafford wearily announced to Houston control: "We're going to bed." The cosmonauts did likewise.

Despite the late bedtime and the fact repeated false trouble alarms aboard Apollo robbed the crew of four hours sleep the night before, Stafford vetoed a suggestion the spacemen sleep late. He and the Russians both said they wanted to stay on schedule.

Ahead lay a second visit today by the Americans to the Soyuz, a return visit by the Russians to Apollo and guided televised tours of the U.S. East Coast and the Soviet Union conducted by the high-flying spacemen for the benefit of viewers on earth.

Gay signs and sketches of the Americans — prepared by Leonov, an amateur artist — welcomed the astronauts aboard Soyuz. A color television camera in Apollo flashed the historic meeting to a waiting world below.

Leaders of both superpowers — until recently arch rivals in the space race started by tiny Sputnik in 1957 — radioed congratulations to the spacemen and predicted this was the prototype of future international space stations.

The astronauts and cosmonauts also exchanged flags of their nations and of the United Nations.

"To you, the courageous conquerors of space, goes the great honor of opening a new page in the history of research," said Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev.

"I am confident that the day is not far off when space missions made possible by this great effort will be more or less commonplace," said President Ford.

The astronauts' wives — two at home and one at work — watched the space spectacular on television. Mrs. Stafford told reporters: "I have a hard time realizing this is really it. I thought the day would never arrive."

$1,100 pay hike over two years

Union okays Pa. contract

HARRISBURG (UPI) — The state's largest employees' union Thursday approved by a four-to-one margin a new wage-increase package that provides an estimated $1,100 pay hike over two years.

Gerald McEntee, executive director of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, said the balloting covered a 10-day period and involved 243 local unions.

He said the vote was 17,782 for and 5,996 against.

The wage package, negotiated under a wage re-opener clause in the contract approved two years ago, calls for an 18 cents-an-hour hike immediately, an 11-cent-an-hour increase Jan. 1, 1976 and a 30-cent-an-hour increase July 1, 1976.

The contract covers about 73,000 workers.

About 60,000 AFSCME workers went on strike July 1, but by the time the strike ended July 4, the state had won court injunctions forcing 25,000 workers to return to their jobs.

Meanwhile, negotiators for the striking social service workers decided Thursday to take an undisclosed contract offer from the state to its membership. Union officials said the vote would come today or Saturday.

The decision came after Gov. Milton J. Shapp called off plans to use volunteers to reopen unemployment compensation offices in Philadelphia that have been closed since the strike began.

Shapp told Labor and Industry Secretary Paul J. Smith Thursday he had reached agreement with Richard Murphy, a national official of the social workers' union, not to reopen the offices because "intensive bargaining is underway."

About 100 volunteers from Harrisburg and other areas are staying in the Sheraton Hotel in Philadelphia, awaiting orders to reopen the offices, which have been closed since July 1, when the strike began.

According to Smith, a decision could be made later to use the volunteers if the talks with the administration prove fruitless.

Union president predicts crippling railroad strike

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Contract talks between the railroads and the railway clerks union broke down Thursday and the union called for a July 28 strike which could deal a critical blow to the nation's economic recovery.

Emerging from 19 hours of fruitless negotiations, President C.L. Dennis of the Brotherhood of Railway and Airline Clerks declared "There will be a strike."

However, he set the deadline for Monday, July 28, rather than July 21 when the present contract expires.

The chief White House labor troubleshooter, W.J. Utery, said "I still think there is a very good possibility to reach an agreement." He scheduled meetings with both railway and union negotiators for today.

If the 117,000-member clerks union walks out, other railway unions will honor the picket lines, tying up the railroads just as economists were reporting the economy starting up the slope of recovery.

Dennis charged railroad operators with being "grossly irresponsible," and wanting a strike.

William H. Dempsey, chief negotiator for the National Railway Labor Conference, retorted: "It's a silly charge."

Dennis, Utery, Dempsey and federal mediator George Ives failed to reach agreement in a night-long session that stretched past noon on Thursday.

Utery had canceled a negotiating session Thursday morning with representatives of the Postal Service and 600,000 postal clerks whose contract also expires Monday, in hope of maintaining momentum on the railway negotiations.

Dennis accused the railroad companies of maneuvering the union into a strike because "they think Congress will bail them out."

BRAC sought earlier wage increases, a cost-of-living adjustment in the last six months of the contract, and provisions involving job security and union coverage.

Congress tightens U.S. oil price controls

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Congress Thursday tightened price controls on domestic oil — a move sure to be vetoed by President Ford — and moved to kill Ford's opposite plan to decontrol oil prices.

The House approved a bill already passed by the Senate which would extend price controls already in effect on 60 per cent of domestic oil and roll back permissible prices on the remainder.

The bill was passed on a 239-172 roll call vote and sent to the White House. The affirmative votes, however, fell far short of the 290 needed to override a veto.

The bill would be effective only through Dec. 31. Anticipating presidential veto, both Houses are also working on simple extensions of current oil price controls and the House is preparing a sweeping energy bill designed to roll back prices and give Ford emergency rationing authority.

Hours before the House vote, the Senate Interior Committee formally asked the Senate to disapprove the decontrol proposal Ford sent Congress Wednesday.

The two moves set up a classical standoff between Congress and the White House, with each side in position to block the other's plans for energy conservation and pricing policy.

The Interior Committee voted 9 to 5 against Ford's proposal to lift price controls gradually from "old oil" — that produced by wells drilled before 1973 — and allow the price to rise from $5.25 to $13.50 a barrel over 30 months.

Space families relieved

HOUSTON (UPI) — Faye Stafford leaned forward into the blaring television set and breathed her own sigh of relief Thursday when her husband opened the hatch for the historic Apollo-Soyuz spacemen's meeting in earth orbit.

"It seems like it's been going on for so long," said the wife of Brig. Gen. Thomas P. Stafford. "I have a hard time realizing this is really it. I thought the day would never arrive."

Deke Slayton's wife watched the telecast with the wife of Alan Shepard, America's first man in space, and Vance Brand's wife went to work as usual but took time to follow the flight via TV.

Mrs. Stafford spent the day monitoring a NASA squawk box and alternately switching channels on the TV set to keep abreast of the latest development. Her daughter, Dionne, 21, and Dee O'Hara, an astronaut flight nurse, kept her company at the Staffords' red brick home a few miles east of the Johnson Space Center.

On the other side of the sprawling space complex, Joan Brand fielded telephone calls at a construction company, finished detail work on a house sale to a young couple and helped stake out a site for a swimming pool.

But when the telecast from space began her business mood changed abruptly and she and her daughter, Stephanie, 19, home for the summer from Louisiana State University, intently watched the docking and spacemen's greetings.

"That's a tremendously good picture," she said. "The hatch is open! Where is Vance at this time?"

Brand was back in the Apollo ship and it was sometime later that she got to see him in another telecast.

Millions of Soviets watch space linkup on television

MOSCOW (UPI) — In a store on Cosmonaut Street, a shopgirl watched the Soyuz and Apollo linkup Thursday and celebrated the space event by playing an Engelbert Humperdinck record, "Please Release Me, Let Me Go."

Millions of Soviet television viewers saw the docking live during their evening meal. Crowds gathered in television stores.

The Soviets still appeared to be having some trouble with their television system. In fact, Soviet viewers saw the flawless docking 140 miles above Central Europe through Apollo's camera.

"It all went according to plan and they completed docking two minutes ahead of time," said Vadim Kravetz, mission control chief at the time. "Everything went even better than in training."

Leonid I. Brezhnev, general secretary of the Communist party, saluted the astronauts and cosmonauts aboard Apollo-Soyuz Thursday as "courageous conquerors of outer space."

In a message radioed to the craft a few minutes after the spacemen had exchanged the first international handshake in orbit, Brezhnev said relaxation of world tension made the mission possible.

Foul smell causes worry

Brief scare on Apollo

HOUSTON (UPI) — With a sudden choke and cough, U.S. commander Thomas Stafford

Thursday gasped to ground controllers a report of a foul, acrid smell that flowed from the docking module that joined Apollo and Soyuz spaceships moments before.

"There's something in the docking module," Stafford said just as Donald "Deke" Slayton popped open the hatch between the Apollo and the airlock.

"We're putting on our oxygen masks. It's kind of weird. We're closing the hatch."

Stafford, Slayton and Vance D. Brand didn't put on the masks or close the hatch because the smell quickly began dissipating. But they sounded scared.

"Very bad odor. It was a burning smell," Stafford said. "It smelled something like burned glue. It smells like acetate."

He said they smelled the same odor only slightly the day before during checkout of the docking module.

Brand said he noticed a similar smell when they visited the Apollo manufacturing plant and suggested it was some kind of glue.

A worried ground communicator Dick Truly kept asking the crewmen to play it safe and radio descriptions of the smell so controllers might determine what it was.

"Just for precaution, we think it would be a good idea, at least one of you guys go ahead and put a mask on," Truly said.

Stafford said he and Vance had their masks close to their face and could slip it on immediately if need be.

Slayton, the old man of the space program and the last of the original seven Mercury astronauts to fly, showed the guts that kept him waiting 16 years for a flight.

"I'm just standing by here to see if I feel any different, but I still feel pretty good," Slayton said, indicating he was being the guinea pig to test the harmful effects of the odor.

What's news

LSD experimented on soldiers

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — U.S. soldier-volunteers were given LSD during 1956-57 experiments aimed at finding a weapon that would temporarily incapacitate but not kill, the former head of the Army's Chemical Research and Development Laboratories said Thursday. The tests were "common knowledge" at the time and involved only a relatively few officers and enlisted men who willingly participated in the program, according to Maj. Gen. Lloyd Fellenz Ret. He said all participants were aware they might receive the hallucinatory drug, but that some did not receive LSD and were given placebos (harmless sugar substances) instead. This, Fellenz said, was to insure that reactions were not psychosomatic. In Washington, an Army spokesman confirmed that soldier volunteers were given LSD in experiments to find weapons that could incapacitate an enemy without killing him.

Nixon absolved of CIA murders

WASHINGTON — Richard M. Nixon apparently took no part in any CIA murder plots and will not testify in that phase of Senate Intelligence Committee hearings, committee members said Thursday. Sen. John Tower, R-Tex., the committee vice chairman, said the former president's lawyers convinced investigators that Nixon knew little if anything about alleged CIA plots to kill such foreign leaders as Cuba's Premier Fidel Castro. "I would see no useful purpose to get a deposition sworn written testimony from him," Tower told reporters during a break in the panel's continuing investigation of alleged CIA misdeeds.

Soviets buy more wheat

WASHINGTON — The Soviet Union probably will need to import 15 million metric tons of grain in the coming year, the Agriculture Department predicted Thursday in the wake of Soviet orders for 5.2 million tons of American and Canadian wheat. The administration gave assurances that the sales would not increase food prices to U.S. consumers. The United States anticipates record crops of both corn and wheat. The forecast was included in a new review of the world grain outlook.

Senate non-sexist

WASHINGTON — The Senate refused to go along Thursday with House efforts to allow separate physical education classes and professional honorary societies for men and women in federally-aided schools at all levels. On a 65-29 vote, the all-male Senate insisted that a sex-segregation amendment be deleted from a $7.5 billion education appropriations bill that would finance grade school, secondary and college aid programs for the 15 months that started July 1. The Senate action came only one day after the House voted 212-211 to keep the controversial amendment in the bill. The legislation immediately returned to the House, and Senate advocates were optimistic the House would reverse its stand and send the bill to the White House.

Nixon funds cut

WASHINGTON — The House affirmed a cut of nearly one-third in Richard M. Nixon's transition funds Thursday when it passed and sent to the Senate a $7.5 billion appropriations bill. The vote was 393 to 18 for the bill funding the Treasury Department, U.S. Postal Service, the White House and several other executive offices through Sept. 30, 1976. The House affirmed a recommendation of the Appropriations Committee that Nixon letter-answering funds be cut from the $328,750 requested by the administration to $226,440, a slice of $102,310. The action restored the monthly rate of expenditure on the former president to $9,615, the same rate of funding from February through June of this year plus 5 per cent for inflation.

Ringo loses mate

LONDON — Ex-Beatles drummer Ringo Starr Thursday was divorced by his wife of 10 years, Maureen, on grounds of adultery with an American girlfriend, model Nancy Andrews. Ringo, sued under his real name of Richard Starkey, did not contest the suit. Neither party attended court. Deputy Judge Miss Beryl Cooper, who heard the case, ordered that Starr have reasonable access to the three children of the marriage while a final custody and financial settlement is worked out.

Student aid advice

HARRISBURG — The Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency said Thursday students who want financial aid for business, trade, technical and nursing schools should file applications immediately. The agency said the application deadline is Aug. 1, but it affects only those students who are applying for grants full time. The agency said 6,055 persons have applied for grants to attend these vocational schools, and the total financial aid will be more than $1.8 million. In 1974-75, 8,182 persons received aid.

N.J. rain damage hits $38 million

TRENTON, N.J. (UPI) — Damage caused by heavy rain and flooding which battered New Jersey for almost a week climbed to $38 million dollars, state officials reported Thursday.

A spokesman for Gov. Brendan T. Byrne said preliminary figures indicated that damage to private houses, businesses and public property totaled $18 million throughout the state.

State Agriculture Secretary Phillip Alampi estimated Wednesday that damage to crops alone would amount to some $20 million.

Meanwhile, a spokesman for J. Morgan Van Hise, state civil defense director, said teams of New Jersey and federal officials would fan out to different parts of the state later this week to survey the damage in detail.

The governor declared a state of emergency Tuesday as flood waters rampaged in New Jersey communities and asked federal authorities for emergency financial relief. Officials in Washington said it would be several days before President Ford decides whether or not to provide the Garden State with full emergency funds.

The spokesman for Byrne said tentative statistics showed that Mercer, Bergen and Middlesex counties suffered the worst damage, which totaled more than $3 million in each of the counties.

U.S. blamed for espionage

Saigon spy ring smashed

SAIGON, South Vietnam (UPI) — Official spokesmen said Thursday an intelligence ring allegedly left behind by the Americans to combat the new Communist government of South Vietnam was smashed by the arrests of all of its members.

The official government newspaper Liberation Daily newspaper said the secret agents were captured last month "along with their weapons and important files of American intelligence."

The ring had its headquarters in Soc Trang Province capital, 95 miles south of Saigon, official spokesmen said.

In making the announcement Wednesday, the officials did not say how many men were in the alleged U.S.-run intelligence network, but said they were among 100 persons arrested in and around Soc Trang last month on security charges.

111 U.S. firms probed for illegal election aid

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Internal Revenue Commissioner Donald Alexander said Thursday 111 American corporations are under investigation for alleged illegal domestic and foreign political contributions.

Alexander said the list of companies was culled from contributors to the Democratic and Republican parties. Leads for IRS investigators came when they tried to determine whether political gifts from top corporate executives came from their own pockets or company coffers.

Speaking with reporters after testifying at a House International Relations subcommittee, Alexander said there were 50 major corporations and 61 smaller companies under investigation.

The number far exceeds the 25 to 30 implicated by the Watergate special prosecutor, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Civil Aeronau-

Linkup impact unexcelled

By HENRY SHAPIRO

HOUSTON (UPI) — The most successful American - Soviet joint enterprise in history was accomplished Thursday with cosmic handshakes 136 miles above the Earth.

In boldness and dramatic impact and in perfection of execution the feat — culminating five years of arduous, oft-critical transoceanic negotiations — excelled any single cooperative endeavor in the troubled history of the two countries.

The significance of the Apollo-Soyuz linkup at a time when the much misunderstood and abused policy of detente is under heavy assault is more political than scientific, more symbolic than tangible.

Yet the scientific achievements and potentialities of the historic rendezvous are not minimized by space watchers of the two superpowers.

— The docking marked the first step toward an international system of repairs in space and rescue operations. The beginnings of making standardized equipment for this purpose have been established.

— It may spell the beginning of the end of the space race launched with the boosting of Sputnik one in 1957 and will stimulate cooperative research as well as the sharing of astronomical costs involved in future exploration of the cosmos. Budgetary problems may already be reflected in the fact that the United States limited itself to 20 launches in 1974 against the Soviet Union's 91, including three manned ones.

— American and Soviet scientists already are thinking in terms of negotiating long-range projects for the construction of bi-national orbital platforms. They are dreaming of international space cities and expeditions to distant planets. Talks for extensive cooperation will probably be held later this autumn after the results of Apollo-Soyuz are fully assessed.

On the political side, the flight has dramatically demonstrated the ability of Americans to reach agreement with the Russians, probably the most difficult negotiating partners this country has encountered in this century.

The obvious goodwill engendered during the operations has considerably dented Soviet suspicion of American intentions.

It may take a long time before the two superpowers achieve satisfactory progress toward the strategic and tactical limitation of terrestrial armaments, but the end of military rivalry in space, where there are no longer any secrets, may come sooner.

In the meantime, the Soviets have given Americans access to areas hitherto considered rigidly out of bounds.

Although Americans offered space cooperation as far back as 1959, the Russians, who had a significant head start in the cosmos, were reluctant to accept until convinced that the United States had not only caught up but in many respects had surpassed the Soviets.

In the late 1960's, President Mstislav Keldysh of the Soviet Academy of Sciences told me when I asked him why American correspondents were not permitted to witness launchings at Baikonur that military considerations forbade it.

Even Star City, the Moscow suburb where cosmonauts live and train, was out of bounds.

Ford telephones space travelers

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford told the Apollo-Soyuz crews in a telephone space call Thursday he is confident "the day is not far off when space missions" like their earth-orbit docking would become commonplace.

Ford talked for nine minutes and 10 seconds to the three American astronauts and two Russian cosmonauts from a special white Signal Corps telephone he usually keeps in the desk drawer of the Oval Office for his top priority calls.

Ford told the astronauts he had watched the historic linkup of the two spacecraft on television in his office. He described the mission as "a momentous event... a great achievement not only for you but for the thousand American and Soviet scientists" who worked on the project over the past three years.

The President said the mission was a "successful experiment in joint United States-Soviet cooperation."

"I look forward to talking to you again on earth," Ford said. "My very great admiration for your hard work and total dedication."

The mission, he said, was "a tremendous demonstration of cooperation" between the astronauts and the cosmonauts. "It's an outstanding example of what we have to do in the future to make this a better world."

Ford teased Donald "Deke" Slayton, 51, for being "the world's oldest space rookie."

He asked Slayton for his advice to youths who want to make future space flights. Slayton replied that anyone who is interested should decide what they want to do in space and "never give up."

Pike applies for $56,000 bridge grant

MILFORD — Pike County Commissioners hope to obtain a $56,000 federal grant to help pay for the reconstruction of the Saw Creek Bridge in Lehman Township.

Commissioners were informed Thursday by representatives of the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation (PennDOT) that the county was eligible for money under a new federal transportation program.

Foster Sankey, assistant district engineer with PennDOT, explained the money could be used for removing obstacles on roads or strengthening, widening or replacing state or county bridges. He said the funds could not be appropriated for maintenance of existing bridges.

Sankey said the program would pay 70 per cent or up to $56,000 of the cost for any state or county highway construction project.

Although Sankey had originally suggested commissioners use the funds to repair a state bridge in Delaware Township (Adams Bridge), commissioners decided the Saw Creek Bridge should be given top priority.

Because the Saw Creek Bridge is owned by the county, the county rather than the state would have to pay the remaining 30 per cent of the project cost, Sankey said.

Commissioners said they will use liquid fuel allocation money to supplement the federal grant for reconstruction of the Saw Creek Bridge.

The bridge, erected in 1911 on Lehman Township Rtes. 300 and 301, is too narrow for present day traffic, commissioners noted.

Lehman Township Supervisors had informed commissioners that the bridge serves major developments in the township including Mountaintop Estates, Timothy Lake Campground and Winona Falls.

Supervisors also noted that the bridge would have to serve future homeowners in Wildwood Estates and Pocono Ranchlands. There are approximately 195 acres of land to be developed in Pocono Ranchland and a potential of 3,500 lots in Wildwood Estates.

The bridge is already used by about 600 cars daily from Winona Falls, 22 permanent residents at Mountaintop Estates and vacationers using 300 trailer and campsites at Timothy Lake Campgrounds.

Commissioners had Fred Schoenagel, county engineer, submit a report on the bridge in February 1974 after supervisors had informed them of heavy traffic over Rtes. 300 and 301.

Schoenagel said the bridge was in good condition structurally, but noted that the approach from the northwest side was steep and included a sharp turn.

He recommended no attempt be made to widen or enlarge the existing bridge, and suggested commissioners contact Monroe County Commissioners for a joint project to extend Rte. 608 to Rte. 402 at Resica Falls to reduce traffic over the bridge.

He estimated the cost of replacing the bridge at $150,000 and said it would cost $20,000 to demolish the old structure.

Commissioners asked Clifton Berger, county coordinator; Fred Schoenagel, county engineer; and Phillip Schroeder, PennDOT district supervisor to evaluate the bridge at 10:30 a.m. Thursday and make a report.

After commissioners formally apply for the funds, bids for the reconstruction work must be received by Oct. 1, 1976.

One mother delivered 1,000 babes

By MAUREEN RUFÉ

Pocono Record Reporter
BRODHEADSVILLE — Her eyes twinkling to reflect the entrance of a visitor, Julia Pasztor reaches out gently, takes your hand in hers and kisses it in a warm Hungarian greeting.

"Happy birthday, July 18, 94 years old," says the long-time Brodheadsville resident in the few English words she has been able to master while living in the United States. She is proud of the fact that after a long life, she will celebrate her 94th birthday today in the county she says is her home.

Having lived through nine and a half decades of history which included two world wars and one major epidemic, Mrs. Pasztor says her eyes are a bit foggy and she has occasional pain in her arm these days. But except for an "As par en" once in a while, she takes no medication.

Born on July 18 in 1881 in a small town near Ungvar, Hungary, "Mommy," as she is affectionately called by those close to her, married at age 18 and first came to the United States in 1900. Two of her five children, Mrs. Julia Varkony and a son John, were born here.

Her husband John worked in a coal mine just outside of Pittsburgh at that time. Both liked the United States, but because John was an only son and missed his family, the Pasztors went back to Hungary in 1908.

Three more children were born to the Pasztors before World War I broke out in 1914. That event signaled tragedy for the entire Pasztor family: John was killed and was buried with unknown soldiers.

With five children to raise, Julia decided to go to school to become a midwife, a proud profession in Hungary at the time because doctors were not permitted to treat a woman in confinement.

It was shortly after graduating from a two-year course at Ungvari Hospital that the great flu epidemic broke out following World War I. According to Mrs. Pasztor, not a single family in her town survived the epidemic without losing at least one person to the flu.

There were so many deaths, there was scarcely enough wood to make caskets for the bodies. "I saw tears and tears and I never saw one woman or man go without asking God for forgiveness during that time," she said.

During her midwife career, Julia delivered 1,000 babies and proudly boasted that she never lost a mother.

"This was my whole life and there was nothing else in the world I lived for more than delivering babies," said Julia through her daughter Helen, who acted as interpreter. "I was rich because God allowed me to be strong and good hearted."

"I was never rich in money for I was always giving it away to people who needed it more," she continued. "But God was always with me and I always had enough."

For delivering a baby, Julia at one time received the pay of a few eggs and a pound of butter.

In 1948 Mrs. Pasztor returned to the United States and has been living in Brodheadsville a great deal of that time with her daughter Helen and her husband Andrew Chizmadia.

Another daughter, Mrs. Julia Varkony, also lives in Saylorsburg.

Two other children are living in Europe, along with Julia's seven grandchildren and 13 great-grandchildren.

When she first returned to the United States in the late 1940's it was Julia who became famous locally for the home-made noodles and apple strudel that she prepared daily for then, one of the first smorgasbords ever to be presented in the area at Varkony's in Saylorsburg.

In 1963 at the age of 82, Mrs. Pasztor decided that she would return to Czechoslovakia and be buried with her family there. Her daughters Julia and Helen returned to their homeland with their mother and left her there. It was only a short time, however, before Julia asked to come back to the United States and to the West End to the people she had grown to love over the years.

Since Julia never became a United States citizen, it took her daughters here three years to get her back into the country.

Now she is happy once again, especially with her birthday celebration set for today. And, according to Julia, the nicest present of all is that she is back in the United States.

"This country is my home," she said in conclusion.

Driver injured

MARSHALLS CREEK — State police from Swiftwater are continuing their investigation into an accident late Tuesday night in Middle Smithfield Township that injured an Analomink man.

Police said a car driven by Ricky F. VanWhy, 21, flipped over on its roof on Gerard College Road, about four and a half miles north of Marshalls Creek.

Cabin burglarized

MARSHALLS CREEK — Thieves stripped a secluded summer cabin near Marshalls Creek sometime between May 30 and Tuesday, the cabin's owner told state police at Swiftwater Wednesday.

Peter Vigliotti reported to police his cabin in Middle Smithfield Township had been entered through a window and virtually cleaned out. He estimated the loss to be $537.

Burglars fail

MARSHALLS CREEK — Burglars tried to break into a Smithfield Township house Tuesday, but were thwarted by a stubborn front door.

State police at Swiftwater said someone broke a thick plate glass outside door at William Post's East Stroudsburg R.D. 2 home, but failed to open the main door.

Lobbyist reform bill waiting out wave of outrage?

By JAMES M. PERRY
Dow Jones-Ottaway News

WASHINGTON — More than 300 years ago, special pleaders began buttonholing members of the House of Commons in a large anteroom known as the lobby. Lobbyists have been with us ever since.

Walt Whitman said they were among "the lousy combings and born freedom sellers of the earth."

I can remember, myself, the time when Lobbyists instructed members of the Pennsylvania legislature, thumbs up or thumbs down, how to vote.

Now, thanks to a moralistic fervor born out of Watergate, there is a movement afoot to do something about it. Bills before the House and the Senate would require lobbyists (many of whom, these days, are legitimate spokesmen for various legitimate interests) to disclose what they have done and what they spent to do it.

Those covered by the proposed legislation — and there would be thousands of them — would have to register as lobbyists, keep daily logs of their receipts and expenditures, and file quarterly reports on their activities with the new Federal Elections Commission, itself a Watergate-spawned reform.

Trouble is, the lobby reform bill (and another important measure that would require full financial disclosure by important officials of all three branches of the government) is stalled in an obscure subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee whose chairman is Walter Flowers, the Alabama Democrat, who played such a dramatic role during the Nixon impeachment proceedings.

The existing disclosure law, the Federal Lobbying Act of 1946, "is an empty sieve," U.S. Sens. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and Robert T. Stafford, R-Vt., testified last April.

"Day after day," Kennedy and Stafford told the government Operations Committee, "lobbyists spend vast amounts of influence money in secret ways for secret purposes. They stalk the halls of Congress and the executive branch with their bankrolls and identities undetected. The interests they represent are rich and powerful . . . The tax laws are a case in point. Fortunes are won or lost on the basis of a single arcane sentence in a lengthy complex bill or a Treasury regulation."

"Look at what's happened recently," says John W. Gardner, chairman of Common Cause, the self-styled citizens' lobby that is the principal lobbyist for the lobby-reform legislation. "Look at all the energy legislation, look at the activity in behalf of the B-1 bomber. You can see the enormous and effective action of the lobbyists, but you cannot document it. You cannot say who the lobbyists saw or what they spent to get their way."

Earlier this year, the General Accounting Office (GAO) reported that of the 1,920 lobbyists' reports filed for the third quarter of 1974 with the Secretary of the Senate, 48 per cent were incomplete and 61 per cent came in late.

Between March 1972 and February 1975, only five potential violations of the old Lobby Act were referred to the Department of Justice — three by journalists, two by members of Congress and none by the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House.

Dick Clark, a Common Cause lobbyist, says "We've got to move beyond where we are now, because the 1946 act doesn't supply any useful information at all."

It's almost the same story with the other reform proposal — full financial disclosure for the President and Vice President, the members of Congress, each officer or employee of the three branches of the federal government making more than $25,000 a year, all federal employees with a GS-15 rating or higher, and all members of the armed services with a 0-6 rating or higher.

Each would be required to disclose:

- The amount and source of each item of income received by him and/or his spouse and dependents.
- Gifts worth more than $100.
- Assets worth more than $1,000.
- Liabilities of more than $1,000.
- And lots more.

Reports would have to be filed each year by May 15, and they would be maintained as public records. Violators could get five years in prison and/or a $2,000 fine. It is a very tough proposal.

Both bills — lobbying and financial disclosure — are stalled in Walter Flowers' subcommittee. Flowers offers several excuses for the delay in getting to the bills. First, he says, his subcommittee lacks staff. Now, he says, he's hired Jay Turnipseed, a young Florida lawyer, and he is already on the job. That should move things along. Second, he says, there is a jurisdictional problem between his committee and John Flynt's Ethics Committee. Third, both he and Flynt were injured recently in a bus crash in Georgia.

So he says his subcommittee will hold hearings and, John Gardner be damned, bills will be reported out, sometime.

Yet, he admits he has reservations about both proposals. "I don't shy from financial disclosure," he says. "But I am just a little reluctant to require it, because we might get to the point where we make public life so public that we wouldn't have any chance for a private life. Maybe we're going to deny public service to anybody who has accomplished a great deal in industry or elsewhere."

The time to change the ways we regulate lobbyists and monitor the finances of our public officials is growing short, I think. Maybe Flowers can outwait the reformers. It's happened often enough before.

Politics rules state again

When, oh, when is the Pennsylvania Senate going to stop playing games with the welfare of the state and its citizens?

The latest episode of the Harrisburg Follies had the Senate turning down four of Gov. Milton Shapp's nominees to top state positions on the basis of politics, never mind whether or not the nominees were qualified for the jobs.

Theoretically, the system should work well. The chief executive submits his list of appointees and the Senate, after careful analysis, probing hearings and thoughtful consideration, either approves or disapproves.

That's the way it works in Washington, at any rate. But apparently, the Washington corps takes its job a little more seriously than the Harrisburg gang. There's also an understanding in the nation's capital that the executive has the right, won by his election, to name people who reflect his views on government and its operations. After all, the cabinet and major bureaucracies operate under the executive branch and since the public has voted for one party standard-bearer or another, that must be what the people want.

That doesn't carry much weight in Harrisburg, though. And, ironically, it doesn't matter whether there's a Democratic or Republican majority in the state Senate. Shapp can't seem to get his appointees past that august body, whether his party is on top or not.

James McHale, for example, has been a champion of the small farmer and the consumer. So has Philip Kalodner. That's not enough, though. Neither McHale nor Kalodner bear the right political credentials — they aren't buddy-buddy with the politicians who have axes that need sharpening once in a while — so McHale is not confirmed as Agriculture Secretary and Kalodner does not get a seat on the Public Utility Commission.

On the other hand, political hacks (and strongmen, we admit) Pete Camiel and Egidio Cerilli sail through as Turnpike Commissioners. The difference? They've paid their political dues, given their all to the Democratic Party, and can be counted on to largely ignore the needs of the public and bow to the wishes of special interests — all of whom contribute mightily to the party treasury.

What Pennsylvania needs, apparently, is a heavy dose of Watergate indignation. Sweep all those old-line politicians out and elect a new slate of reform-minded representatives and senators. Then, maybe, when the governor, whoever he is, submits nominations for state posts, the legislators will consider the state's needs and the nominees' qualifications (what are those?) instead of plain politics.

Ford to veto CPA

"The basic concept is wrong," insisted Erlenborn.

Vice President Nelson Rockefeller contended that the present power of the Attorney General to intervene in behalf of the consumers merely had "led us into much litigation which really didn't help the consumers."

The President agreed. "It would really slow down the agencies," he added.

"I put objections in the (Congressional) Record from several cabinet officers," spoke up Sen. Carl Curtis, R-Neb., the Senate Republican conference chairman.

Lonely Frank Horton was overruled.

Tito's Revenge: The Yugoslav government has jailed its famed dissident writer Mihajlo Mihajlov on fraudulent evidence, we have discovered. The prosecution used a well-meaning letter from a Connecticut engineer in an attempt to show Mihajlov was conspiring with exile groups.

But Mihajlov swears he does not know the engineer who, even in his letters, makes no claim of ever having met the "Solzhenitsyn of Yugoslavia."

Mihajlov was arrested last October for the unpardonable offense of publishing books and articles critical of Yugoslavia. No less a personage than President Josip Tito personally denounced him.

At the writer's trial, along with standard Communist charges of "spreading hostile propaganda," the prosecutors produced a letter from one "Raymond Cooper" to Mihajlov. A court observer from the International League for the Rights of Man reports the mysterious letter, "for reasons of security," was read only in a closed session.

The letter was supposed to prove Mihajlov was conspiring with American exile groups. But Cooper was not identified, and Mihajlov passionately swore he knew no such man. Nevertheless, he was convicted and dispatched to the somber Sremska Mitrovich prison for a seven-year term.

How people are ordered to lie, but not told to do it

can't we indoctrinate ours with capitalist realism? The underlying modalities are the same, which will facilitate detente.

Proscribed stereotypes

The Guidelines themselves proscribe such "objectionable stereotypes" as "dumb athletes, stupid, beautiful women, skinny intellectuals wearing glasses, fat social misfits, old ladies with 20 cats or emphasis on the upper classes alone to portray the 'typical' lifestyle in a period in history."

It might be more in keeping with ideals of education in a non-totalitarian society to understand stereotypes instead of abolishing them. Many athletes seem dumb for the very good reason they spend their time cultivating their bodies; the same reasoning can be applied to dumb blondes and bookworms. The TV is crowded with health spa ads offering hope to fat social misfits, and if you don't know a poor, lonely old lady who has nobody but her cats to talk to you probably are a Radcliffe student.

Read Macmillan's Guidelines and you'll see why George Orwell's "1984" is the most influential book in the English language today: "Accurate Portrayal" Versus Ideal Situations:

Except in the social studies field, we are more interested in emphasizing what can be, rather than the negatives that still exist. 'Reality' itself is subject to slanted interpretations. The fact that black persons do not yet hold a proportionate share of executive positions should not prevent us from depicting a sizeable number of blacks as executives." Doublethink, nothink, black is white, up is down, and now you know how people are ordered to lie without exactly being told to do it.

The Guidelines are very specific about what propaganda line the textbook writers are to take: "Show most Spanish-origin people as fluent in Spanish and English, or teaching themselves English . . . Group scenes should not portray one minority person, or in other ways make blacks stand out as the exception."

They have a great collection of do's and don'ts for the hacks who manufacture this trash. Don't show "Mother bringing sandwiches to Dad as he fixes the roof." Show "Mother fixing the roof." Don't say "each citizen must pay his taxes." Say "all citizens must pay taxes."

How to falsify

There are minute instructions for the Chinese. Henceforth in the textbooks at least, they will no longer engage in the laundry or restaurant business, "nor need Chinese students always be depicted as majoring in mathematics, although there are cultural precedents for the fact that many Chinese do enter technological fields." This helps to explain how the most slavish, Soviet writer can innocently misapprehend his instructions and stray off the official line without knowing it.

What's doubly infuriating about Horner and Macmillan is that conservatives will rightly pick on this and call it a liberal plot. As if the cause of feminism or the black people had to rest on telling school children lies. No wonder they're blowing up schoolhouses in West Virginia because of the textbooks.

The Guidelines claim that Macmillan wishes to eliminate "any trace of social bias." That in itself is fool's gold. The best we can hope for in life is to state our biases, but in fact the underlying biases here are neither pro-woman nor pro-black. Beneath the flouncy verbiage about realizing individual aspirations, what these people are selling is a depraved egalitarianism in which children are turned into atomized pumpkin people who may serve the man (sic) power needs of government and corporation but certainly not truth or beauty.

During World War I they made everybody say victory cabbage instead of sauerkraut.

Tax reward for volunteer efforts can be significant

Sylvia Porter

unteer hospital or Red Cross service — provided they are not suited for general use.

Cost of operation and repair of personally owned equipment used in performing services. This would include such items as aircraft, automobile, radio equipment, etc., furnished by a volunteer for the Civil Air Patrol.

Also the cost of public service, whether you are elected or appointed. More and more men and women are going in for local politics — many of you serving without pay as mayors, councilmen and trustees in your towns and villages. More often than not, you'll wind up out-of-pocket when your term of office expires. You can deduct these costs as charitable contributions. Keep your records.

If you were to take a few minutes to calculate how much time you spend for a variety of activities other than actual attendance at services at your church, synagogue, other house of worship, I'll wager you would be amazed at the number of hours. There are so many volunteer services for which you are entitled to deduct out-of-pocket expenses, that you'll send a perfectly valid tax deduction right down the drain — unless you keep track throughout the year. And half the year already is gone.

Just consider how the trips you and your spouse make to and from your church for volunteer services can add up in dollars and cents. Say, for instance, you live in the suburbs, about 12 miles from your church, are both active in church activities. Say that in 1975, you and your spouse chalk up 6,000 miles going back and forth. Multiply this by the automatic 7 cents-per-mile cost and you have a deduction of $420! And this doesn't even touch on what you contribute to the collection plate or any other charity.

Choir robes

Since your distinctive uniforms and accessories — such as choir robes and Brownie troop leader's uniforms — are not suitable for general use, the costs of buying and cleaning them also will be deductible on the '75 return you'll file in 1976. You must have all these records for proof, if questioned.

You and your spouse are probably dues-paying members of one or more charitable organizations. Of course, any amount you pay over regular membership dues is a deductible contribution.

But your regular dues are deductible too, if your membership privileges in the charitable organization are merely nominal and you're not entitled to special services.

Caution: Contributions can be deducted only if made to a corporation, trust, community chest, fund, or foundation operated exclusively for purposes that are charitable, religious, educational, scientific, literary, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals. The organization must be organized or created in the United States.

Direct contributions to individuals — say, a friend who is out of work and in need — cannot qualify.

As for how much you can deduct, the answer is: generally, only the amounts you actually pay. The overall limitation on what can be deducted (which affects few of us) is: no more than 50 per cent of your adjusted gross income.

You are entitled to deduct for clothing you donate to charity but that warrants a special section in Monday's column.

Senate panel sneaks in legislators' expense hike

HARRISBURG, Pa. (UPI) — The Senate State Government Committee — by voting proxies for five members who did not attend — has slipped a 50 percent expense account increase for legislators into a bill.

It was learned Thursday that the committee amended a House measure Wednesday and increased annual expenses for legislators from $5,000 to $7,500. In addition to the expenses, legislators are paid $15,000 annually.

It will cost $632,000 a year. It already costs taxpayers $1.2 million a year for expenses for the 253 Senate and House members.

"It was sort of a hastily called meeting attended by very few committee members," said Sen. Edward Howard, R-Bucks, who was unaware of the session and opposes the increases.

"There was just no notice of the meeting. I left Harrisburg at about 3 p.m. and by the time I got home, one of my staff members called to tell me that the meeting was reconvened and amendments to increase expenses were approved."

The staff member was Joyce

Freeman. She said the amendment to increase expense accounts was sponsored by Sen. Austin Murphy, D-Greene, who was not immediately available for comment.

Sen. Quentin Orlando, D-Erie, also succeeded in introducing an amendment to increase mileage for legislators from 12 cents to 15 cents a mile. He said he did not know who voted for the measure.

"There were only five senators there as best we can tell, and they used proxy votes to get the nine votes," said Howard's assistant. "They had no Republican proxies. We're saying they violated both the Sunshine law and Senate rules."

Sen. Joseph Smith, D-Philadelphia, who heads the committee, was not available for comment. Neither was Sen. William J. Moore, R-Perry, apparently the only Republican to support the measure.

There was a regularly scheduled meeting of the State Government Committee Wednesday, advertised under the provision of the Sunshine Law, but the notice contained no mention of the bill to increase expenses.

Smith recessed the meeting in the morning after considering the two bills on the agenda. He said the committee could meet later in the day to consider a "technical matter" involving Temple University.

The committee action Wednesday followed a pattern the legislature has often used in the past when hiking salaries or pensions. The increases are quietly added to a minor bill and no public announcement of the change is made until the measure is ready for final passage.

Firemen may get tax break

HARRISBURG (UPI) — The Pennsylvania House Thursday approved a bill to exempt volunteer fire, ambulance and rescue companies from payment of the nine-cent-a-gallon tax on gasoline and diesel fuel.

The measure passed 183-0 and was sent to the Senate, where quick approval was expected.

If signed into law, the measure lets volunteer companies file for a refund each year for taxes paid on the fuel they use. It was expected to cost the state $305,000 and local governments $70,000 a year.

The House also approved, by a 178-0 vote, a bill to place on the statewide ballot next year a $10 million bond program to provide low-interest loans to volunteer companies for new facilities and equipment.

No-fault stampede begins

HARRISBURG (UPI) — Pennsylvania's mandatory no-fault auto insurance law goes into effect at 12:01 a.m. Saturday, and there appears to be a last-minute rush by uninsured motorists to comply with the law.

The law requires that each automobile in Pennsylvania be covered by bodily injury and property damage insurance, and according to the Insurance Department, there are up to one million uninsured motorists in the state.

"We've been quite busy writing new business with people who haven't had insurance for 15 years," said Donald Gelbaugh, office manager of the large insurance firm in Camp Hill, Cumberland County.

Burton Rosenfield, president of a Philadelphia insurance firm, said his six offices have been so busy with no-fault requests that he has had to help man the phones.

"As a result of no-fault insurance requests, we are very busy. And in fact, I think every insurance company is swamped."

There, also appears to be much confusion about the law, according to state and insurance industry officials.

"I would say that most of our customers do not have a basic knowledge of what no-fault is," Gelbaugh said. "A surprising number of people think it applies to all coverage. They think it covers property damage."

Insurance Department officials say that many insurance agents do not have the proper paperwork or accurate information to give confused motorists — particularly those confused about the many options offered under no-fault.

The Insurance Department, however, has set up a "hotline" number motorists can call toll-free to have questions answered. The number is 800-882-8410.

Under the no-fault concept, a motorist injured in an auto accident will be paid by his own insurance company no matter whose fault the accident was. Payments cover medical expenses, wage losses and other benefits.

Pa. Instant Lottery proves success at sales window

HARRISBURG, Pa. (UPI) — Pennsylvania's Instant Lottery carried a $1 million price tag, but it has proved an instant remedy to sagging ticket sales.

The instant lottery game started May 27, the same month Pennsylvania's unemployment hit a 17-year high of 9.8 per cent. Lottery sales had dropped as low as $1.56 million during one week.

Two weeks after the introduction of Instant Lottery, gross sales for all three games set a different kind of sales record — $5.6 million in one week.

A month later weekly lottery sales totals were still running $3.5 million—with the Instant Lottery accounting for two-thirds of the sales.

"Instant Lottery not only has won good acceptance," Lottery Director Lynn Nelson said, "but more young adults are playing this game. Many of them either rarely bought lottery tickets before or not at all."

Nelson said sale of Instant Lottery tickets is nearing two-thirds of the total 60 million planned before the sale ends.

"We definitely will not continue the game past 60 million tickets and that time probably will come sometime in August," he said.

New games are the lifeblood of lotteries and the end of Instant Lottery probably will coincide with introduction of a new offering to join Double Dollars and Baker's Dozen.

Nelson said the state's $1 million contract with Scientific Games Inc., Ann Arbor, Mich., to develop Instant Lottery and print the tickets was not the result of competitive bidding because a survey showed it was the only firm capable of manufacturing a ticket that could not be "feasibly compromised," the phrase used for counterfeiting.

Scientific Games, headed by Daniel Bowers, registered with the state Corporations Bureau last February to become eligible to do business in Pennsylvania.

"It was a question at that time of buying from Scientific Games or not buying at all," Nelson said. "Now at least three other firms claim they have developed ticket production that cannot be compromised, so if we do it again, we would probably open it to bidding."

"Obviously it's important we have a tamper-proof ticket. At least one private corporation's promotion game had to be dropped because the winning tickets were discernible in advance."

Philadelphia lays claims to oldest Declaration copy

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Scientific detective work by the Library of Congress has established that the oldest copy of the first published version of the Declaration of Independence is in Philadelphia, according to two historical authorities.

Using isotope techniques and other atomic age methods, the investigation showed that the fragment of the historic document owned by the Historical Society of Philadelphia was the printer's proof.

This would make it the first to come off the presses of John Dunlap on the night of July 4-5, 1776, and make it the oldest of the 21 copies that now exist.

At the suggestion of Julian P. Boyd, a noted Jeffersonian authority, Frederick R. Goff, former chief of the library's Rare Book division, undertook an examination of the surviving Dunlap copies.

The document viewed by millions of tourists at the National Archives is the formal engrossed copy which wasn't authorized until July 19, 1776, and signed over a period of months after that.

The Dunlap broadsides bear only the printed names of John Hancock, president of the Continental Congress which declared independence of British rule on July 4, 1776, and the legislative secretary John Thompson.

Goff reported that X-ray techniques of the Philadelphia copy showed quotation marks not found on other copies and an additional article on one of the lines.

This, Goff said, was "incontrovertible evidence that the copy in the custody of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania is the printer's proof. The quotation marks and the extra letter were eliminated when additional copies were run off, he theorized."

Sixteen of the Dunlap copies which were sent to the colonial governments, military commanders and others for public reading are in the hands of institutions and five are in private hands. The most famous is the one in the Library of Congress found in George Washington's papers which he read to his troops in New York in August, 1776.

Goff's detective work also brought out from watermarks that the paper used in the first publication was of Dutch origin, probably exported to the English market and obtained by the Philadelphia printer.

Boyd believes Thomas Jefferson probably supervised the printing with apprentices working from a "fair copy" he had made after the delegates made changes in his original rough draft. He said possibly 100 copies were run off at the printshop working through the night.

The printer's proof in Philadelphia covers only about the first third of the Declaration. Boyd speculated that it was probably divided into thirds so three apprentices could begin setting type immediately and the other portions were later thrown away.

More jurors seated for Little trial

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) —

Two more jurors, one of them black, were seated Thursday in the murder trial of Joan Little, a young black woman charged with killing a white jailer she claims tried to rape her.

The acceptance of Paul L. Lassiter, a 25-year-old white Raleigh attorney, and Hazel Lee, a 57-year-old black janitor at a school in nearby Apex, brought to six the number of jurors tentatively seated for the trial. There are now four whites, two men and two women, and two blacks, one man and one woman, on the panel.

Lee and Lassiter each said they were opposed to the death penalty, but both said they would vote a guilty verdict if the evidence warranted.

Miss Little, 21, charged with the icepick stabbing death of Beaufort County jailer Clarence Allgood last August, would face an automatic death penalty under North Carolina law if convicted of first degree murder.

While the jury selection process was in its fourth day, a small group of pro-Little demonstrators, most of them white, stationed themselves across the street in front of the Wake County Courthouse. One woman waved a placard reading, "Free Joan Little Now; The Criminal is Already Dead."

The first black juror, Pecola Jones of Fuquay-Varina, was seated Wednesday while Lester V. Chalmers, a member of the prosecution staff from the state attorney general's office, was absent.

Dead-parcel auction bargainland

Postal booty for sale

By TOM ADKINSON
Dow Jones-Ottaway News
ATLANTA — The U.S. Postal Service usually has a big cache of booty in the basement of the Federal Annex Building on Forsyth Street in downtown Atlanta. It's the mail that is undeliverable and unreturnable. It's periodically auctioned, and you can buy much of it for a song. Similar auctions are held in Boston; Chicago; Fort Worth, Texas; New York City; New Orleans; Omaha, Neb.; St. Louis; St. Paul, Minn.; San Francisco; San Juan, Puerto Rico; Seattle; Washington, D.C.; and Cincinnati.

An array of items that would make any discount-store manager's heart sing nearly fills the dead-parcel office in this massive gray building: automobile tires, record players, encyclopedias, watches, silver services, photographic film, men's underwear, suitcases.

The list stretched for 332 lots of merchandise for sale at a recent auction — an accumulation of a few months' mail from Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, and South Carolina. "Anything that goes through the mail can end up here, and it does," says Ron Denney, a young Postal Service public-information officer.

"You can get anything in this world here," echoes John Shipp, manager of the Postal Service's Atlanta Sales Division, who doubles as the local auctioneer. "You get items that can't be (legally) mailed. You can't mail a wheelbarrow (assembled), but I sold one. You get purses, keys, anything dropped in a mailbox, along with snakes, Coke bottles, and puppies." The snakes, bottles, and puppies don't make it to the auction.

Shipp's biggest sale: $700 or $800 for two Hasselblad camera lenses. His smallest sale was a three-year-old city directory he practically had to give away.

When a parcel is undeliverable, it takes some time before it ends up in a dead-parcel office. Insured items are held at the office for delivery for six months, and others are held 60 days. Then all are forwarded to a regional auction center where they are held another 60 days. All the while efforts are made to find the owners and match parcels with tracer forms postal patrons fill out.

A common situation is a parcel simply misaddressed. No return address is on the outside, and an inspection of the contents yields no clue to its origin or intended destination.

Some items also arrive at dead-parcel offices because mailing labels have been torn off or have fallen off, or because an addressee refuses delivery and the sender refuses to take it back.

"We could go out of business if people would use return addresses," says W. S. Rogers, foreman of the Atlanta Undeliverable Mail Office. Rogers also suggests including both sender's and addressee's complete addresses inside each parcel.

When all the required time has elapsed and attempts to find owners have failed, the auction machinery begins to operate. The Postal Service manual says each of the 14 dead-parcel offices must have an auction at least twice a year, but more often if the amount of merchandise warrants it. Atlanta usually has three or four a year. "You can always count on one after Christmas," Denney says.

Clues to learning disabilities

Dr. Ira S. Salafsky of the Evanston, Ill., hospital is studying and analyzing the lines on the skin of the palm. He believes that his findings may be a clue to learning difficulties that occur in young children.

To establish the validity of his concept, he is studying preschool children in the hope that it will lead to clues for the reasons of abnormal learning disabilities.

Dr. Salafsky believes that dermatoglyphic, or skin-like, analysis may be effectively used for the early recognition and the earlier treatment of learning problems.

House calls, so prevalent years ago in the practice of medicine, may be returning.

An interesting program initiated by Dr. Robert B. Mims in Los Angeles County, aims at treating more people in their homes rather than in the doctor's office or in hospital clinics.

A significant quotation of Dr. Mims emphasizes the value of this new approach, especially with elderly patients.

He reports on a query of 40 home-care physicians. "They enjoyed the long-term follow-up of the same patient and the chance to see the patient's home environment."

To many patients it felt like an old-fashioned doctor relationship. It will be interesting to see if this plan is extended to other parts of the country.

A new type of pacemaker is being tried to correct some types of curvature of the spine in young children.

Dr. Walter Bobechko, at the Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto, working with a physicist, Dr. Morely A. Herbert, uses a small radio receiver about the size of a silver dollar.

It is implanted under the skin and sends messages to the muscles around the curvature of the spine. This stimulates and strengthens the back muscles. So effective is this technique that orthopedic surgeons in many parts of the United States are trying the procedure, with gratifying results in their young patients.

DR. COLEMAN welcomes letters from readers, and, while he cannot undertake to answer each one, he will use questions in his column whenever possible and when they are of general interest. Address your letters to Dr. Coleman in care of The Pocono Record.

Kissinger directs travels toward Middle America

By HELEN THOMAS
UPI White House Reporter
WASHINGTON (UPI) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger is traveling around the country drumming up support for President Ford's foreign policy. In some ways he looks like a political campaigner but Kissinger has no apparent intention of running for office.

He traveled to Milwaukee and Minneapolis this week to deliver a series of speeches articulating his rationale for detente with the Soviet Union and what he called "the moral foundations of foreign policy."

Kissinger got the idea at a dinner party in Washington when he spoke glibly of the sentiments in the "heartland." A reporter turned to him and asked, "What do you know about the feelings in the heartland?"

World traveler Kissinger, who has racked up hundreds of thousands of air miles in his globe-girdling diplomacy, had to admit that his acquaintance with Middle America was somewhat wanting.

So he decided to embark on his crusade for many reasons, not the least of which also is to enhance his own popularity.

Since Ford became President Aug. 9, rumors have recurred from time to time that Kissinger is on his way out. Kissinger is the first to deny that he has any intention of resigning and says his tenure will run at least until Jan. 20, 1977, inauguration day.

Kissinger's stock has been at a low ebb in recent months in Washington because of the failures of American foreign policy in Indochina and setbacks in his shuttle diplomacy in the Middle East and in the attempts to bring about an agreement between Turkey and Greece over Cyprus.

Kissinger also lost ground with liberals in the country when he admitted that he submitted the names of his National Security Council staff and four newsmen to be wiretapped.

After revelations of Kissinger's role in the wiretapping during the Nixon administration, he staged a stormy tirade in Salzburg, Austria and threatened to resign unless he got a vote of confidence from the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. He got it.

In some ways, Kissinger seems to be asking the American people for a vote of confidence and to bolster the backing he needs to restore some of the foreign policy making power to the executive branch. Judging from his own personal appeal, he can be a winner.

Kissinger never shows up at an airport or at a gathering where he is not lionized like a movie star, both at home and abroad. He has a superstar status and frankly admits an ego which has not diminished despite the recent attacks on him.

Kissinger admits that he may be the cause of some of his own problems. "I have a first rate intellect and a third rate instinct about people," he says. He is very jealous and possessive of the two hats he wears — as secretary of state and Ford's national security affairs adviser. A recent presidential panel recommended that those two jobs be separated, but bent over backwards to praise Kissinger for his performance in handling both positions.

Kissinger sometimes appears to conduct foreign policy under his own hat. Correspondents who cover him daily have even been known to write that Kissinger is touring the country to defend "his foreign policy."

Tops for electronics

Machinery runs on gold

NEW YORK (UPI) — The electronic age is highly dependent on gold — not to buy electronic machinery but to keep it running.

Even some straight electrical devices such as plug connectors used in controlling the brakes on semi-trailer trucks depend on gold.

"No other metal has been found that will provide reliable and long lived electrical and electronic connection contacts at the tiny wattages used in these sophisticated applications," says Paul Aicher, president of Technical Materials, Inc., Lincoln, R.I. "Platinum, palladium and other metals have been tried, but they all have serious disadvantages in comparison with gold."

But gold is expensive — $160 or more an ounce in the industrial market. Much more serious, it is comparatively scarce, and even though it can be recovered when old electronic devices are junked, it becomes increasingly difficult for the electronics and electrical industries to get enough.

Industry in the United States alone uses 700,000 ounces of gold a year. The electronics and electrical manufacturers are by far the biggest users with jewelers and dental supply people following.

Naturally, the electrical and electronics manufacturers have gone to great trouble trying to find substitutes for gold. When these efforts failed they turned to ways to reduce the amount of gold needed to transmit the electrical or electronic impulse.

These efforts have been successful and Aicher's company has played a leading role in them.

"We have worked out techniques that can reduce the amount of gold required in sophisticated connectors by 25 to 90 per cent, according to the application," he said. "Perhaps we can save 25 per cent of the total industrial need for gold. At present prices that would be $24 million a year but the physical conservation is more important than the money saving."

The gold is saved in two ways. First, by substituting an alloy that contains only 55 per cent gold for 24 or 18 karat gold. The metals used for alloying in the case of Technical Materials' patented alloy are silver, cadmium and indium, but there are other alloy formulae that save gold in electronics manufacture.

Much more important, Aicher said, are new sophisticated techniques of applying the gold. "Until comparatively recently," he explained, "small parts frequently had to be gold plated all over to make certain they would transmit an electronic current. Now we have learned to apply the gold only in the tiny area where it is needed in stripes as thin as a hundred thousandth of an inch."

High speed machines built by Technical Materials, for example, turn out the thin gold alloy in a continuous strip that is skived into a larger strip of base metal. Skiving means cutting a groove into a ribbon of metal so another metal can be inlaid in the groove and bonded firmly.

The gold alloy strip can be centered in the base metal ribbon, made to cover all of it or applied to one edge of the ribbon according to the kind of contacts needed in a particular electronic device. This ribbon can be cut and expertly applied at only a modest increase in labor costs but with a huge saving in gold.

"Perhaps," said Aicher, "our efforts can save enough gold around the world to have a braking effect on the speculative rise in gold prices."

Garden patch: Controlling earwigs

By JOHN E. WITHROW
Monroe County
Agricultural Agent

An interesting insect many people have seen this year for the first time is the European earwig. The adult is reddish brown and about three-quarters of an inch long. The body has a pair of strong forceps on the rear part. The female has straight forceps while the male has curved ones.

The young earwig resembles an adult female, but is smaller and lighter in color. The forceps are weak and slightly curved.

Earwigs breed in old organic materials around house foundations and flower beds. The female lays her eggs in a nest. Both adults live in the nest until the eggs hatch. The female will take care of the young until they are old enough to care for themselves. The number of young in a brood will average about thirty.

Earwigs hide during the day. They roam and eat at night. They will hide in garden plants, in shrubbery, in wood-piles, at base of trees, and behind loose boards on buildings.

They feed on plants, ripe fruit, and garbage. They will damage such plants as dahlias, zinnias, lettuce, strawberry, celery, potato, bean and beet. They also damage sweet corn by feeding on the silk. They will cut off the silk and destroy pollination. The ears may be spotty with kernels.

The earwig is chiefly an outdoor insect. Individuals will crawl into houses, or they may be carried in with vegetables, fruits or flowers. Their habit is to hide among petals or leaves. Later they may crawl out unnoticed, hide again, and come out at night for food and water.

The European earwig got into the northwestern part of the United States early in 1900, apparently in cargo from Europe. They spread rapidly in the western states. A few years later they came to the east coast, probably also in cargo. Their spread in the East has not been extensive. They need abundant rainfall for moisture and food.

The insect is spread largely by man — in bundles of plants, in cut flowers, or in florists' equipment. Spread by natural means is limited. Earwigs seldom fly and cannot stay in flight very long. In order to fly, they must take off from a high object. Their wings are not strong enough to lift them from the ground.

Most home grounds in Monroe County do not have sufficient numbers of earwigs present to justify extensive chemical control programs. A continued abundance of moisture and organic materials may cause their number to increase.

Several species of parasitic flies are natural enemies of the earwig in Europe. Two species of the parasites have been brought from Europe and distributed in some of the infested areas.

If your vegetables or flowers are being destroyed by the earwigs, a carbaryl (Sevin) spray or dust will do the job. If too many are crawling into your house, first clean up the old leaves and other dead vegetation around the foundation. Then a spray or dust of chlor-dane, carbaryl, diazinon or dursban around the foundation should keep the earwigs out.

Money knows no sex

Buying home simple cash matter

NEW YORK (UPI) — Good news for the singles who want to own homes.

You can — IF. It's a big IF, but home ownership is within your reach.

You start with money. The matter of singles and home buying came up because this column recently told of a national survey of 1,000 single women from young to middle years and beyond. Three out of five preferred the single family residence over apartment dwelling.

No sooner was the study reported than my desk was swamped with queries. The big question: All right, we too want to own a home, but how do we acquire it?

One secretary, with I hope a tongue in cheek, said she rents an apartment but "if you can lend me $150,000 I'll buy the house... that's my dream."

She also wanted to know if a single man stood a better chance at financing than a woman. I found no discrimination. Money has no sex.

So here go the guidelines for single men and women (and they just as well could apply to any other buyer) gleaned from talks with a bank, a private mortgage insurance company, and the Federal Home Loan Bank Board in Washington.

Start with credit qualifications. Jackson W. Goss, president of Investors Mortgage Insurance Co., Boston, a private mortgager, led off with job stability as primary. The final decision would be up to the lender, but it would consider the length of employment and responsibility of the single's position. Lenders like to use five or more years with a company as a gauge.

The company that employs the buyer is important — not one that has been in business a short time. The better the company, the better the risk, in the lender's view.

An account with the lender is important. The buyer must have sufficient account to cover at least 10 per cent down payment.

Amount of down payment varies regionally, said Raymond Forshay, assistant cashier with the First National City Bank, the nation's second largest commercial bank.

Actually, it averages about 25 per cent nationally, said a spokesman for the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. Mortgage insurance companies will insure the lender for the difference, up to 20 per cent of the loan. And the borrower pays the insurance premium.

The board said the 25 per cent down payment was on completed transactions, both for newly built and older houses. Count in too, another 1.6 to 1.4 per cent lawyer's fees, title search, recording, surveys and other necessary services.

Savings and loan companies may lend up to 80 per cent of appraised value, said the board.

Count into your budget too the fact that mortgage interest rates run 8.5 to 9.5 per cent nationally, said Forshay.

Marriage tag $5; still no guarantee

By JEFF WIDMER
Pocono Record Reporter
STROUDSBURG — It had to happen. While the cost of man's necessities — food, fuel and fun — burgeoned with inflation each year, the price of getting married remained stable at a meager $3.50.

Now the price of a marriage license is $5, and, as consumers have become accustomed to, there is a state tax on the document — 50 cents.

But the price increase that went into effect in Monroe County Sept. 15, 1974 has not dampened business in the prothonotary's office in the Monroe County Courthouse in Stroudsburg, the place where licenses are granted.

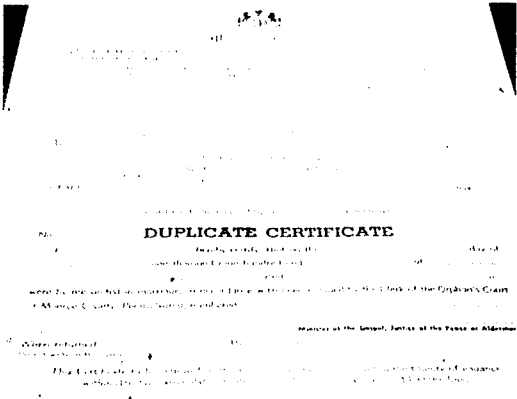

During the first six months of 1974, 250 licenses were sold. During the first six months of this year, the prothonotary's office issued 331 licenses, the largest run on licenses coming in May 1975, when 75 were issued.

Until the state increased fees charged by the clerk of the orphans' court, the cost to an applicant for filing and printing the license was $3.50.

The cost of printing the county's licenses at Sun Lith-Print in East Stroudsburg has increased about five to seven per cent to the present 10.4 cents a license. The remainder of the price of a license pays for paperwork by the county.

But why does one need a license to be married in the first place, one might ask.

Monroe County District At-

This license is for life

torney James F. Marsh offered a few off the cuff suggestions.

"It's a way to regulate society. It is part of the orderly progress of society," he said.

Producing a marriage license allows a widow to claim her husband's estate, allows children to prove they are legitimate and inherit property, he commented.

Now that the necessity of getting a license has been established, details of how to obtain a license are in order.

Both husband and wife to be must fill out and sign an application, obtainable from the prothonotary's office.

After the couple fills in standard information, like mother's and father's names and birthplaces, the clerk must decide if the applicants are "weak-minded, insane or of unsound mind", under the influence of liquor or drugs or related by blood.

A blood test is also required in Pennsylvania, although it should be noted that the test, to detect syphilis, is not required in many states and the Virgin Islands.

If you are under age 16, it will take an order of court for you to be married. If you are between 16 and 18, parental consent will do.

After the couple makes application, the pair must wait three days before the license can be granted, and the license is good for 60 days after its issuance.

A worker in the county prothonotary's office said she did not know why there was a three-day waiting period, but said the joke in the office was that three days gives either party time to back out.

Craftsmen to exhibit in outdoor festival

LAYTON, N.J. — Peters Valley Craftsmen, Inc., will present its sixth annual crafts fair from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. July 26 and 27 at the valley in Layton, N.J.

The fair is held outdoors, rain or shine, and the public will be able to meet the 60 to 75 craftsmen who will be exhibiting and selling their crafts.

Just Between Us —

By Bobby Westbrook

I wish "Jack and the Beanstalk" had been a little more explicit about how he got that bean plant to stay up there. I've got some tomato plants with the same tendency to out-grow any stakes and which are so heavy with fruit they pull them right over.

Of course, my problems with tomatoes are aggravated by the fact that I was less than explicit when I ordered the plants. Last year I started so late that only a warm October ripened the fruit at all, although my two plants did a great job in producing all I could use.

This year I ordered early enough along with flowers and stuff and got so carried away by the choices available that when they asked which tomato plants I wanted, I checked the choices of a friend: one early variety, one late, one cherry tomato, one pear tomato, more than twice as many as last year but with a longer growing season.

Except when I relayed the decision to duplicate her order, I just said, "Double Mrs. Cramer's order!" That's how come I got home with 10 tomato plants. And that's how come my flowers are covering under their shadow; my stakes are bowed into arcs; and I'll probably take to the streets with a wheelbarrow to peddle tomatoes when they start getting ripe.

Of course it's been a great growing season especially with all that rain. Which also has made a lot of less desirable things grow too: like dooms so they stick, like water in the cellar so it mildews, and dispositions having a tendency to do likewise.

Although I'll have to admit the kids weathered a pent-up weekend better than their elders. And in Philadelphia it was worse than it was here; you faced the choice of staying in the house or half-drowning just getting to the car.

But Nancy inadvertently hit on the magic formula for producing angelic children over a weekend. "Since it's raining and we can't do anything anyway, we might as well do all those chores we've been putting off," she decreed adding "so don't plan to have your friends over."

Well, from then on they were virtually invisible and played together so quietly and so amicably that it wasn't until we arrived puffing after four flights of stairs with an armload of stuff that we remembered they were even in the house, and that this was the sort of lugging that they were supposed to be doing.

Which was their bright idea, of course. There's nothing in home, office, or club to remind the powers-that-be that you aren't really doing your share like in-fighting, tale-bearing or even being too audible or visible whenever everybody else is busy.

A lot of very busy people, however, not only saw but heard Henry Jordan on the David Frost show recently. Claus and Charlotte's Henry is a psychiatrist and he was being interviewed on the show on the effects of emotional behavior on obesity — or something. They were so impressed with how handsome he looked and how well he spoke that they gave me a rather garbled account of what he said.

Which brings me back to the beginning and the lesson I learned in being accurate in my use of words: "duplicate" and "double" don't mean the same thing — not when you're talking about tomato plants, they don't.

This Series Of Messages In Support Of The Church Is Sponsored Each Week by the Following Individuals and Businesses.

THERE IS NO GUESSWORK

In some respects the work of the engineer or surveyor and the Church are strikingly similar. The engineer establishes lines for direction, road beds and grades to be followed by the builder. Nothing is left to guess work. The builder does not have to wander. His lines and directions are already laid out.

In the building of a successful and fruitful life the Church acts as an engineer. It blazes the trail, establishes lines and locates the proper roadway. The roadway it establishes avoids the pitfalls and quicksands. It points the way and he who follows that way wanders not through life without goal and without accomplishment.

There is a church that will serve as your engineer. Find the one that best fits your needs, serve it and it will serve you.

1. The potential losers are a heart, two diamonds and a club, but one of them can almost surely be saved by capitalizing on the knowledge gained from the bidding. North appears to have the Q-J of hearts, the A-Q or A-J of diamonds, and king of clubs for his opening bid.

The first move in the winning direction is to duck the queen of hearts! The purpose is to prevent South from later taking the lead with a heart for a killing diamond return through the king.

Let's assume North plays another heart. Win with the king, draw trumps, play a low club to the jack, cash the ace of hearts, and play the ace and another club. North presumably wins with the king but is end-played. He must return a diamond or yield a ruff and discard.

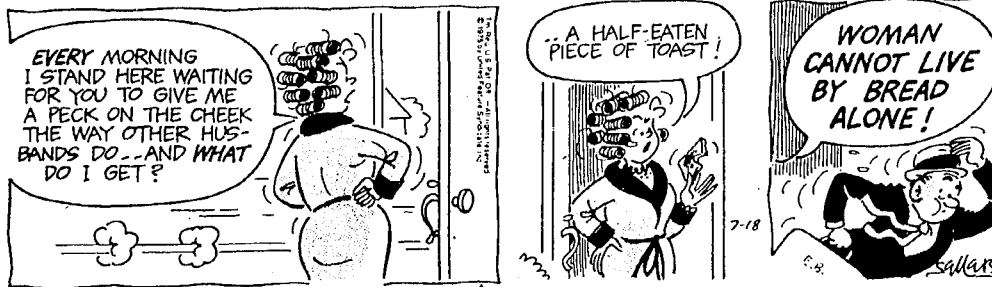

2. Your best chance for twelve tricks lies in a crossruff. However, you should prepare the groundwork for the crossruff, after winning the club, by first cashing the A-K of diamonds. There is of course a possibility that either diamond will be ruffed, but that involved far less of a risk than any other method of play.

Next play a spade to the ace and ruff a spade. It is important to ruff a spade in your hand before ruffing a club in dummy. (If you think it makes no difference, try ruffing a club first. You are apt to finish with eleven tricks instead of twelve!)

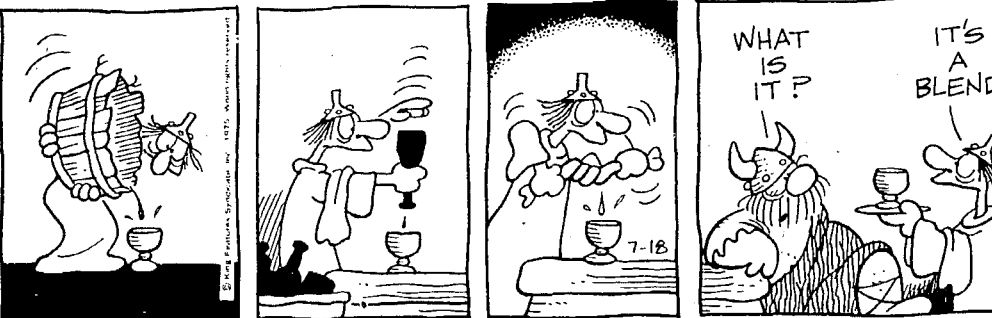

Then ruff clubs and spades, back and forth, thus scoring eight trump tricks, a spade a club and two diamonds.

State health unit takes charge

'Sir, this aspirin's no good at all'

HARRISBURG, Pa. (UPI) — What do you do if the slimmer belt you paid $14.95 for because it guaranteed amazing weight loss doesn't work?

Or where does a doctor go when he discovers defective pacemakers or purchases sterilized bandages that have been packaged incorrectly?

Pennsylvania's Health Department thinks it has the answer. It has instituted a new registration program for the medical device industry to crackdown on unsafe or ineffective items.

Jack Ogun, head of the Drug, Device and Cosmetic Compliance Section, says the goal is to get a directory of thousands of companies that make medical devices.

"That way, whenever a problem arises, we will immediately know where the product came from," Ogun said. "Then we can take action to correct problems."

It is the first time the state has tried to monitor the medical device industry—a business which operates with few of the restrictions that regulate the drug industry.

"It's much easier to market a device without all the testing that is required for drugs," Ogun said. "Sometimes, technology runs far behind public acceptance for these things." And that leads to sale of products that offer miracle cures even though there is little research to prove the devices are effective, according to Ogun.

Some of the weight loss belts are good examples, he said. The department has obtained embargoes against some sales and has forced manufacturers to roll back on exorbitant claims.

The department has another major goal in the voluntary registration program. It will allow the state to scrutinize the claims manufacturers make for their products.

"We want to take a hard look at any of the claims that are made for devices," Ogun said.

"There are a lot of companies making exaggerated claims that aren't backed up by research."

Labeling is another target. Ogun noted the state has already cracked down on the sale of acupuncture needles by one manufacturer because the product did not carry the notice that the needles were for sale to medical practitioners only.

Health Secretary Dr. Leonard Bachman said the new regulations cover all manufacturers, distributors and retailers of medical devices.

"We can now begin to protect the health consumer from being flim-flammed by quack products," Bachman said.

Space newest telephone 'line'

LONDON (UPI) — The developed and emerging worlds will be watching the launch of a new American communications satellite later this year with more than usual interest. Some see it as a step towards breaking the grip of landlines.

Landlines are expensive to lay down, especially in difficult or remote terrain, and expensive to maintain. The cost is daunting even for an oil-rich country like Iran which would like to improve communications to its vast rural areas in a campaign to stamp out illiteracy.

And, of course, over long distances it takes time.

An alternative to landlines has been obvious since the start of the space age—a complex of satellites big enough to carry many more channels than the first pioneers. But Irving K. Kessler says that only now has the technology advanced to the point where the "birds" can begin to be practically all things to all countries.

Kessler was in Europe to attend a conference and to examine such advanced projects as the Anglo-French supersonic airliner with the expert eye of a man who is executive vice president of the RCA government and commercial systems division. Despite his own impressive credentials he admits he is sometimes baffled by the ideas his team of scientists plucks out of the shadows of the future.

"I just make them explain until I understand it," he said.

What's coming up in the next two or three years?

A micro-processor—a chip one-eighth inch square packed with information that would have filled whole cabinets in former years—is one item. Among other things it will improve dramatically the fuel efficiency of the automobile. Another is a TV news camera which will broadcast from the scene, cutting out the time-wasting process of getting material back to the studio.

But what interests Kessler most at the moment is the domestic communications satellite.

"It's our first," he said. "It will have 24 channels, double the old spinners. Its overall weight is 2,000 pounds and we're using new materials to give it great strength." It is the first of three and Kessler expects the volume of traffic handled will bring down the cost per message.

"We will cover all of the United States," he said. "We worked hard at developing a footprint that would cover the U.S. and give maximum coverage to the state of Alaska so they would be able to get messages and television even up in the bush."

During its comparatively long lifetime of eight to 10 years, the satellite also would cover Hawaii, he said.

"The emerging world is very interested in our birds," he said. "It means they won't have to go through the intermediate steps of landlines to reach their remote villages."

Question: How do scientists put thousands of bits of information on a one-eighth inch square? Kessler says they don't—at first. Initially they work it out on a much larger area, say a blueprint two feet square. Then they reduce it proportionately to micro-dot size.

Standing pat on gun laws

CHARLESTON, W. Va. (UPI) — While many states are taking steps to beef up gun control laws in an effort to curb crime, West Virginia appears to be standing pat with statutes already on the books.

It's easy to buy a gun in West Virginia.

The state doesn't require persons who buy guns to register them or carry identification cards, but a reporting program has been maintained because authorized gun dealers must account for every sale.

State Police Supt. R. L. Bonar said he doesn't favor a stiff registration system such as the one implemented recently in Massachusetts, where there's a seven-day waiting period to get a gun and a person caught carrying one without a proper identification card gets a mandatory one-year jail term.

Bonar opposes bans on guns. "I'll keep guns from the good people, not the criminals. I believe the Constitution guarantees our rights to protect our homes."

Adults in West Virginia can purchase a gun unless they are convicted felons or known drug addicts or alcoholics.

The buyer is required to submit only his name, address and date of birth on a data processing card.

The dealer fills in a description of the gun, its serial number, caliber, model and manufacturer. He then mails the card to state police headquarters where it is filed by computer.

The toughest part of the law involves getting permits to actually carry handguns in the streets. To do this, a gun owner must obtain a special authorization from a circuit court judge.

There are about 1,500 pistol-carrying permits in the state. Overall, there are about 300,000 firearms of all types on file in West Virginia, which has a population of 1.8 million. Up to 25,000 guns are added to the list each year.

When a crime is committed, the ballistics report indicates what kind of weapon has been used and the computer is keyed to offer a print-out of those models and where they were sold.

While Bonar believes a person should be allowed to purchase a gun to protect his home, one of his top officers—Lt. Scott Neely—disagrees when it comes to handguns.

Neely, director of the state police criminal investigation unit, says that while the gun control law is generally adequate he'd like to see restrictions toughened on handguns, even a ban on them.

"This argument about keeping handguns around the house for defense I don't buy. We have more accidents that way," Neely said.

It has been estimated that half the shootings in West Virginia involve handguns.

Aid for state colleges hinges on enrollment estimates

HARRISBURG, Pa. (UPI) — Pennsylvania college officials and government budget makers can't seem to agree on the number of students headed for the state-owned college system.

The debate is important because the legislature has begun to balk at approving increased aid for the schools, especially since there are predictions of drops in enrollment.

The colleges got an early warning this year when the legislature cut their aid request by $16.6 million for fiscal 1975-76.

All day/Every day

GRANT CITY POCONO PLAZA, EAST STROUDSBURG

Budget officials apparently didn't agree and cut the money for the schools, a move that was approved by the legislature.

Now, education officials are predicting a deficit budget for the coming school year and are gearing up for next year's budget fight.

The department predicts state colleges will pick up about 10,000 more students by 1980, bringing the total to over 87,000.

The state's Commissioner for Higher Education, Jerome M. Ziegler, says budget makers are wrong, the number will go up over the next four years.

Ziegler said tuition has gone up at private colleges, making the state-owned colleges more attractive to the middle income student.

He also said the number of 18-year-olds graduating from high school is continuing to increase slightly.

Doesn't buy figures

Richard Willey, an education budget analyst for the House Appropriations Committee, doesn't buy the department's figures.

"I don't believe the state colleges are going to have 87,000 students by 1980," he said.

For one thing, the projected number of high school graduates is to drop after 1975, he said. The percentage of those going on to college is also expected to drop.

That and the fact that there should be fewer veterans in school leads Willey to believe the number of students in the system should continue to decline.

There are 79,220 high school graduates expected in the state in 1975 and that is projected to drop to 72,000 by 1980, he said. In light of the already declining enrollment the last few years, he wonders how the Department of Education can predict more students.

Both sides agree that the colleges will lose students rapidly after 1980 and will face a larger number of changes.

The schools are already taking steps to meet the deficit budget predicted for this year. There will be some "retrenchment" among the non-instructional staff this year, Ziegler said. Retrenchment means layoffs and hiring freezes on jobs that are vacated.

Education Secretary John C. Pittenger ordered the presidents of the 13 state colleges and Indiana University to send him lists of projected layoffs for the next school year. All of the lists were in his office by July 1.

Pittenger has also ordered college heads to send him plans to avoid laying off workers. These were submitted July 16.

Protected this year

Instructors are protected from layoffs this year in their contracts. But Ziegler said the teachers will not be protected in next year's contract and retrenchment will be a reality for them soon.

The colleges might face some more trouble when the results of a study commissioned by Gov. Milton J. Shapp are made known.

A team of businessmen has been studying the government since April looking for ways to save money, including a look at the state colleges. The report is due some time in July.

A tuition hike for the schools is a certainty, said Ziegler. The department included a $50 increase in their budget request. But the secretary might increase that to $100 in order to minimize the budget deficit.

The state colleges will continue to make savings in their operating budgets, Ziegler said. Fewer books and supplies will be bought, and regular maintenance will have to be postponed in some cases, he said. For example, the buildings might be painted every seven years rather than every five.

Curriculum changes have been made and will continue to be made, the commissioner said.

For a long time, the schools were putting out more teachers than the state could absorb. All of the state schools were at one time strictly teacher's colleges. Now, the emphasis is on a diversification of curriculum. It will mean that some of the teachers in the field of education will be among those retrenched, but many will retire early or be retrained to instruct in related fields.

"Pennsylvania is in the lead in this country in doing that," Ziegler said. "We want to have it (retraining program) going in a big way in a couple of years."

Dick Rodgers' wife Dorothy also passed her longrun loyalty test — invested $16,000 of her caviar allowance . . . The London scuttle suggests Les Ambassadeurs famed gambling mansion's the investment target of Arabs who'd like to camouflage ownership; very tough to do by British government laws.

Jill O'Hara, once the beloved of a famed writer (but the goo-goo didn't work out), will star in the first original production from the Theater Guild in an epoch: "The Culture Caper" is the title, co-starring Dead End Kid emeritus Gabe Dell; it gets a world premiere tryout at the Rowena Stevens Pocono Playhouse this week; ultimate terminus: Broadway. It's by veteran Broadway playwright Jerome Chodorov ("Junior Miss," "My Sister Eileen," "Anniversary Waltz") and is being staged by Jerry's brother Ed, who wrote "Those Endearing Young Charms," "Oh Men, Oh Women" and endless film scripts.

Some rock groups give themselves names seemingly subliminally hopeless to start out: the British group "If" just disbanded; so has the American group whose name was its own critic: "Raspberries" . . . Nothing tripped up the group calling itself "SNAPU" but it's watching its step . . . Something seems rotten in Cooperstown at the name of this group: "Babe Ruth."

Six months ago Monti Rock III couldn't get any booking beyond a rare Greenwich Village favor at $150 a week; three hit records in a row, a commentary on rock-taste, and he's up to $6,000 a week plus percentage!

Apology might work

SCARED: (Q.) Michele and I were very close for three months. Then we had an argument and I broke up with her. I decided I had made a mistake and tried to get her to go back with me but she refused.

Yesterday she told her friends that the reason she wouldn't come back to me was that her mother didn't like me. I never did anything to make her mother dislike me. I think Michele is very scared of her mother. How can I get her back? We are both 19.

Help in Pennsylvania

(A.) Fear of her mother doesn't explain why Michele went with you three months without trouble. That sounds like an excuse to me. You seem to be the real reason. You hurt her by rejecting her and then you confused her by trying to get her back. Only a full apology — from the heart, sincere — is likely to do any good. Even that may not work. But it is worth trying.

TWO COLORS: (Q.) My problem is a very rare one. I like Robert very much. That isn't unusual. The unusual part is that I am white and he is black.

I haven't told anybody, including my parents. I'm afraid they won't understand and I'm afraid other people will make fun of us. Should I date Robert? If so, openly (in public) or privately?

Serious in Indiana

(A.) My mail tells me that your problem is getting less unusual all the time. Many boys and girls write me letters like yours. My answer has been and is that even minor problems, such as difference in religion or education or background, can cause troublesome stresses in a friendship. A difference in race is certainly not minor. Weigh your feelings very carefully. The fact that you fear misunderstanding and ridicule is significant.

Do NOT date Robert without your parents' knowledge. (I would say this about any boy.) If they approve, invite him to your home to see how you and he and your parents get along.

(Write to Jean Adams, care of The Pocono Record, P.O. Box 2402, Houston, Texas 77001. Every letter is read, but because of the great number received Jean Adams cannot send personal answers.)

Monroe planner job open

STROUDSBURG — The next administrator of the Monroe County Planning and Zoning Commission could receive a salary anywhere between $9,500 and $16,000.

The Monroe County Commissioners Thursday told the personnel committee of the planning commission that an administrator fresh out of school should start between $9,500 and $10,000 a year.

The salary would then increase proportionately with education and experience, the commissioners said.

Over 80 applications for the job have been received, according to Commissioner William Quinn. He said the planning committee has eliminated about half of those applications.

Quinn said some of the applicants will be discouraged when the planning commission notified them of the salary range since some are already making $30,000 a year.

The position of planning administrator became vacant in March when Douglas E. Williams resigned his $13,656 a year job to run for county commissioner. Vincent Feeney has been acting administrator since then.

Bridge repair authorized

STROUDSBURG — Advertising for bids to repair the bridge at the Old Mill in Sciota was approved Thursday by the Monroe County Commissioners with the bids expected by the end of the month.

Clifford Dennis, county engineer, told the commissioners the work will include replacing the bridge deck and sandblasting and painting the beams.

Dennis said inspection of the bridge showed the abutments are capable of handling school buses or snow plows. He said he is hoping for at least a 10-ton load limit.

Regarding the Reaser Bridge at Beaver Valley Road, the commissioners said they have requested $42,000 from the state to make the one-lane bridge into two lanes and two spans.

Dennis said a right angle turn at the end of the bridge would also be eliminated and made into a sweeping curve.

The commissioners said the state money would only cover a portion of the cost of the work. The state has said it plans to use $42,000, or half a government road grant to build a new bridge in Effort. The county is asking for the remaining half of the funds.

Air show rescheduled

Performers who were scheduled to do dare-devil stunts on July 12, when the show was postponed for bad weather, will be on hand.

Antique, home-built, and military planes will be on display.

All tickets sold for the July 12 performance will be honored.

Explosive issue burns slowly

STROUDSBURG — The formation of a bomb squad to serve Monroe County is still in doubt, with the possibility of a cooperative squad in several counties being investigated.

The Monroe County Commissioners said Thursday Joel Keller, county civil defense director, has received replies from three counties surrounding Monroe. The surrounding counties were asked if they would be willing to participate in the formation of a bomb squad which would serve the northeastern region of the state.

The commissioners took the action following a request by Keller to send two men to Alabama for three weeks of training at a cost of $1,285 of which the federal government would pay for all but $378.

In Lehigh County, the Allentown Fire Department has a trained bomb deactivation team composed of paid firemen.

In Northampton County, the cities of Easton and Bethlehem each have bomb squads in their police forces. Keller said he will investigate the possibility that Monroe County can work in conjunction with the two cities to get a bomb squad.

In a letter from Carbon County, Keller was told that county's civil defense office and sheriff's department have expressed interest in a joint effort for training and mutual support but would need more information on the training program.

The commissioners had also questioned the amount of equipment which would be needed by a bomb squad. Keller said he was unable to obtain a list of necessary equipment because each municipality must determine what it wants.

There is no charge for any of the activities. More information is available through the National Park Service Information Station, off I-80 in New Jersey in the Delaware Water Gap or by phoning: 201-496-4458.

Tilwick said Thursday he sold the 50-acre lake to Saylor's Lake Enterprises Inc., which already has the recreation and entertainment area in full operation.

Tilwick said the sale price of $225,000 included all fixtures, furniture, liquor, fishing equipment and other miscellaneous equipment "right down to the last screwdriver."

Tilwick said he will help guide the new owners through this year with the operation of the facilities.

Pike municipalities favor county sewer plan

By BRUCE POSTEN

Pocono Record Reporter
MILFORD — For most Pike County municipalities, approval of a $20,000 county sewerage facilities plan appears to be the best road to travel as long as the state doesn't decide to block it.

Nearly a month after Pike County Commissioners released the study, most municipalities have decided to adopt the Glace & Glace report as their official sewerage plan.

However, the Department of Environmental Resources

(DER) has yet to complete a review of the study that recommends on-lot disposal systems rather than central sewerage.

According to DER spokesmen in Stroudsburg and Kingston, a review will not be completed for the next one or two weeks.

So far, commissioners have received only two letters from county municipalities in response to the sewerage plan. Matamoras Borough approved the county plan, while Lehman Township rejected it, noting the township already had an approved DER feasibility sewerage plan.

Township Supervisor Lester Litts said Lehman's plan calls for central sewers over a period of years.

"We have quite a few developments — so many that there is hardly any open land left in the township," Litts said.

"In another 10 years, we feel central sewerage will be needed in the township. If we would have waited longer than that, it would have been too late," he added.

Although the commissioners have not been officially notified, Milford Borough adopted the county plan in July and Westfall Township approved the plan at a meeting this week.

Westfall Supervisor George Campbell, who recommended adoption, said he had reservations about the plan, but termed it "better than nothing."

"I don't know if DER will approve it. It just seems a bit loose," he said.

Leith Hoffman, Milford council chairman, recommended the council approve the plan because the borough would have had to spend funds to submit its own plan otherwise.

The council had delayed having a disposal plan prepared, pending the release of the county study.

Other townships that have approved the plan include Milford, Palmyra and Dingman Townships.

Some of the townships plan to consider the county plan at their next meeting and expect to approve it.

Paul Buehler of Palmyra

Township expressed the sentiments of many supervisors, however, when he stated, "Right now we are just waiting for DER."

"We've submitted three different plans of our own to DER and have had trouble getting approval for them," Buehler said.

"We want detailed comments from DER this time if they decide to reject this one (county plan)," he added.

Stroud zoning revision may block truck terminal plan

By STEVE DRACHLER
Pocono Record Reporter
STROUDSBURG — Reaction from dozens of Stroud Township residents apparently had quite an effect on township planners preparing a comprehensive land use plan for Monroe County's most populous municipality.

After two informational meetings, planners have proposed a modified plan showing several critical changes from the preferred plan they presented in May.

The most controversial section changed by planners concerns a tract of land a large trucking firm wants to develop into a huge transfer terminal.

In their first preferred plan, planners said they wanted to change the area's zoning from residential to commercial — automatically allowing Consolidated Freightways Inc., of Melo Park, Calif. to build the truck terminal.

But, after an estimated 1,500 township residents signed petitions and dozens more appeared at township meetings, planning commission members reconsidered.

The proposal to supervisors leaves the tract zoned residential, except for a 300-foot strip already zoned commercial.

According to Victor Rodite of Cabot Associates, the planning commission's consultant for the two-year land use plan project, another important change occurred in plans for along Rte. 209 in the southwest section of the township.

Originally a large section of the land around Shafer's School House Road was due to be zoned industrial.

After hearing comments from the public, planners reduced the size of the industrial area and expanded the residential zone, Rodite said.

Planners had originally considered several alternatives, each relating to a particular pattern of growth in the township.

Rodite said the final plan, which will be considered by township supervisors after attorneys rewrite several sections of the zoning ordinance, should be completed by the end of July or early August.

Township Supervisor J. Nelson Westbrook said Thursday supervisors hope to have a public hearing on the new land use and zoning plan in August and will enact it soon afterwards.

Another area of change in the final recommendation by planners was in regard to locating Rte. 209 through the township.

Rodite said planners will not make a firm recommendation for routing the busy road through any part of the municipality.

Instead planners will wait for federal and state agencies to order Rte. 209's relocation. Then planners will tell the governing body the road should be located in the northern section of the township.

During the public meetings residents opposed locating a new Rte. 209 through any section of the township.

They said the four-lane road would serve to bisect the township, putting the majority of residential areas between two superhighways — Rte. 209 and Interstate 80.

Planners also changed the section on commercial development along Rte. 611 beyond the scope of their rejection of a change for the trucking firm.

Instead of nearly continuous strip of commercial development, planners have broken up commercial areas along Rte. 611. Buffer zones will be residential areas and nondevelopment of some steep slopes and natural barriers.

Rodite said the plan also includes some suggestions for recreation in the township. Planners would like to see supervisors appoint a township recreation commission to oversee development of a recreation area near the Stroudsbury Middle School on Chipperfield Drive. They also urged supervisors to seek cooperation from school officials in developing recreational areas.

Business slump cuts P-K hours

EAST STROUDSBURG — Instead of furloughing several employees, 29 non-union personnel at the Patterson-Kelly Co., East Stroudsburg, will begin working four-day, 32-hour work-weeks July 28.

Linton Patterson, vice president and chief executive officer of the East Stroudsburg plant, said Thursday a 20 per cent reduction in orders during the past few months is the main reason for ordering the reduction in working time.

"This is an alternative to laying people off," Patterson said. "Everyone keeps his job and keeps on working. We think this is better than layoffs."

While the 29 persons initially affected by the workload reduction is small when compared to the 450 workers at the plant, Patterson said other departments may be forced to cutback on working hours if conditions worsen.

Union departments will not be affected by the reduction. A contract with the union does not allow reduction in working hours. Instead layoffs will have to occur. The seniority system will be used to determine who is furloughed.

Patterson said work in the drafting department and in the rating and sequences department will continue five days a week. Some personnel will work Tuesday through Friday. Others will work Monday through Thursday.

The slowdown in orders is a product of the economic recession, Patterson said. "It shows up slower in businesses like this because we make capital goods."

Patterson Kelly Inc., a unit of Taylor-Wharton Co., which is a division of Harsco Corp., makes industrial equipment.

Septic installation may pollute well

MINISINK HILLS — Joe Kellerman has a problem. He is afraid to use a newly installed septic system because it might pollute a water well 50 feet away.

Thursday night Kellerman took his dilemma to Smithfield Township supervisors, claiming the septic system should never have been approved by the township's inspector and demanded supervisors assume financial responsibility for remedying the problem.

"I have a system I spent $2,700 for and it can't be used," Kellerman said.

"But I have a certificate, signed by Russ Williams of Hess Associates, saying it meets the specifications, when it doesn't," Kellerman said.

Kellerman said Williams, acting in place of regular township sewerage inspector Nicholas Losca because the septic system was installed by Losca's son, Paul, failed to check to see if there were wells within a 100 foot radius as required by state law.

"It's impossible to live there without a bathroom," said Kellerman, adding he and his family are required to use a bathroom in Delaware Water Gap, a short distance from his 76 year-old Cherry Valley Road home.

Kellerman told supervisors a state court last year decided in a similar case the township is responsible for its sewage inspector's actions.

"The septic system has to be moved, but I don't think, nor do I have the resources to do it. It was improperly installed and improperly inspected," Kellerman said.

"I found out when I returned home from giving an exam." He is a high school chemistry and biology teacher in High Point, N.J.

After hearing Kellerman cite his problem, supervisors agreed to contact Williams and meet at the site today.

However, one supervisor, Richard McDonough, said he did not have to visit the site to know that someone goofed.

"It looks to me right now that Mr. Williams goofed," said McDonough.

Kellerman said he does not want Williams to re-inspect the system and told supervisors they should have an independent authority come in to evaluate the situation.

He added it would not be satisfactory to order Losca to redo the system as he has lost confidence in the sub-contractor's performance.

Mosquito spray plan needs local initiative

STROUDSBURG — If townships in Monroe County want additional spraying against mosquitoes, they may have to provide it themselves, according to the regional consultant for the Department of Environmental Resources.

Dale Williams said if townships purchased equipment for spraying and the manpower, George Fox, local vector control agent, would train them how to spray and what to look for.

Fox said there is so much mosquito breeding in the county that he and his assistant, Jacquelyn Hakim, do not have time to cover all areas.

Fox said all their time is taken up in East Stroudsburg, Smithfield and Stroud townships. He said he would like to hire college students next summer to help with the spraying

McDade discloses holdings

WASHINGTON BUREAU
Offaway News Service
WASHINGTON — Rep. Joseph M. McDade, R-10 owns at least $5,000 worth of stock in the Potomac Electric Power Co., according to his latest personal financial disclosure statement.

McDade also reported that he earned at least $300 for a speech he gave last year to the Greenbelt Consumer Services. He is not required by law to report the exact amount of his earnings from either source.

Rep. Fred B. Rooney, D-15 reported that he owns 200 shares of common stock in General Electric Co., worth at least $5,000. He also listed speaking honoraria in excess of $300 from the Outdoor Advertising Counsel, and the American Iron and Steel Institute.

Manor funds due

STROUDSBURG — The state Department of Public Welfare still owes the county $191,780 for Pleasant Valley Manor reimbursement, the Monroe County Commissioners said Thursday.

The commissioners reported that a state audit showed the county was due approximately $406,475 of which $214,695 has been received, leaving $191,780 to be paid.

The commissioners said there is often a problem with getting the money due to differences between the state and county in classifying nursing home residents for intermediate or skilled care.

In other matters, the commissioners received notice from the state Department of Community Affairs to watch for what purposes they use the First Ward Park.

Under the rules of the department, the land can only be used for recreation, conservation or historical purposes without prior approval by the legislature.

The notice said some governments in the state were violating the regulation and it wanted to prevent further violations by other counties.

In other business, the commissioners approved the spending of about $375 from the county civil defense budget to send Director Joel Keller to two flood seminars at The Pennsylvania State University.

The cost of the Aug. 25-29 seminars is $250 plus about $125 for meals and lodging for five days. According to Keller, the seminars are designed to help the layman understand and implement effective flood planning.

The commissioners also noted the civil defense office will conduct a disaster planning meeting at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, Aug. 7.

This year's simulated disaster will involve an aviation-type disaster which is a real possibility due to the heavy amount of air traffic over the county, Keller told the commissioners.

The commissioners agreed to take under consideration selling use of the county's computer to Pleasant Valley Manor Inc. once the corporation takes over operation of the county nursing home, probably next month.

Action on the matter was tabled pending further discussion.

Properties still face tax sale

STROUDSBURG — Although $143,000 in 1973 real estate taxes was collected in the past three days, there is still about $100,000 remaining to be collected, according to Thomas R. Joyce, Monroe County treasurer.

In May, Joyce mailed out about 2,600 delinquent tax notices in an attempt to get $475,000 in back taxes.

If taxes are not paid promptly, the property involved will be sold at a tax sale Aug. 8, Joyce said. Persons paying their 1973 taxes between now and the sale will be charged $11 advertising costs as well as interest and penalty.

Up the flagpole, no one salutes

STROUDSBURG — Monroe County Commissioner Arlington Martin got nothing but chuckles from his fellow commissioners Thursday when he proposed purchasing a new state flag.

Martin said the $21 flag

"Maybe the county can buy one for use at special occasions," Martin told Commis-

Treasurer officially resigns

STROUDSBURG — The Monroe County Commissioners Thursday accepted with regret the official resignation of County Treasurer Thomas R. Joyce.

Joyce cited personal reasons for resigning in the middle of his second full term. Earlier this week he was appointed highway superintendent for the county by Jacob Kassab, Pennsylvania Department of Transportation (PennDOT) secretary.

The commissioners agreed to prepare a resolution honoring Joyce and to present it to him at a later date.

Robert J. Coleman of Kunklelown R.D. 1 has been nominated to replace Joyce by Gov. Milton Shapp and has gone to the state Senate for confirmation.

'There are some really schlocky who's who outfits'

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of two stories tracking publications listing students of achievement. How much of it is legitimate? How much is pure sales?)

By JEFF WIDMER
Pocono Record Reporter
STROUDSBURG — How do you tell who's who among who's who type publications?

Although the book titles appear similar, the honors and scholarships their publishers offer vary tremendously.

There are two types of legitimate publishers in the field. An example of one is the A.N. Marquis Co., Inc. of Chicago, which produces "Who's Who in America" and similar volumes.

Marquis books are stocked by public and school libraries as a standard reference work, said Russell J. Emele, director of the library at East Stroudsburg State College.

The volumes list biographies of important and professional persons.

However, a number of publishers use the same format, and in some cases similar titles, to entice students and teachers to buy a book with their names listed in it. The volumes, Emele said, have no value to researchers.

Of the latter kind of who's who type publishers, three dominate the market in Monroe and Pike Counties. They are:

— Educational Communications, Inc. of Northfield, Ill., publishers of "Who's Who Among American High School Students."

The size of a volume of an encyclopedia, the book without students' pictures sells for $16.95, with pictures for $19.95.

According to Nancy Laird, a public relations woman for Educational Communications, the company mails letters three times a year to 24,000 principals or guidance counselors in public, private and parochial schools, asking them to nominate students for inclusion in the annual publication.

Church youth groups and service organizations with youth group affiliates are also asked to nominate students, she said.

Laird said the company sets no criteria for student selection. She said principals and guidance counselors can choose any and as many students as they want, but added the company encourages them to choose students in the upper ranks of their class.

Students should also have demonstrated community service, she said.

Once the schools return a list of nominations, the company sends a blank biographical form to each student. Returned biographies are printed if the student has a "B" average or better, she said.

The biographical form is also an order blank for the book, but Laird emphasized that "No one has to buy the book to be in it."

Educational Communications also grants $25,000 in scholarships each year, but having your name printed in who's who does not automatically make you eligible for the grant, she stated.

— Outstanding Americans, publisher of seven who's who type series. A publishing arm of Fuller and Dees Marketing Co., Inc. of Washington, D.C., the company is a subsidiary of the Times-Mirror Publishing Co., Inc. of Los Angeles.

The company publishes seven titles: "Outstanding Teenagers of America", "Outstanding Elementary Teachers of America", "Outstanding Secondary Educators of America" and four others recognizing college educators and athletes, young men and young women.

Outstanding Americans uses the same technique to obtain names and biographies as Educational Communications, according to Patricia Green, the company's program manager in Montgomery, Ala.

After the school principal chooses the students and teachers he thinks are outstanding, according to his own criteria, and sends the list to Outstanding Americans, the company notifies the nominees and asks them to buy the book.

Again, a person does not have to buy the book to have his biography published, Green said. But if the person buys a book, it will cost between $18 and $24, she said.

Outstanding Americans also offers scholarships, and anyone included in its publications is eligible to compete for them, Green said. Judging is done by the company.

Ten regional scholarships of $500 are awarded to students each year. Two national $1,000 scholarships are also awarded, Green said.

Elementary teachers whose biographies are published become eligible to compete for one of five national grants of $500. Secondary educators can also compete for one of five grants of $500 each.

— The Society of Distinguished American High School Students, publishers of a who's who type volume by the same name.

The society solicits nominations and biographies in the same way as the other two firms, but prints every biographical form that is returned, said Les Siegelman, the company's executive director in Birmingham, Ala.

Siegelman said his firm also acts as a clearing-house for colleges that offer scholarships, matching society members with available grants.

The directors claimed the company offers about $800,000 in scholarships over a four-year period.

He said the society's book of student biographies and a scroll are sold for $17.25.

Although the who's who business is confusing now with similar titles for dissimilar books, the situation was even more jumbled a year ago when the "society" called itself "The Society of Outstanding American High School Students."

Siegelman said his firm changed its names because of a conflict with Outstanding Americans.

Green, of Outstanding Americans, put it more succinctly. "They were publishing our names (in the company's books) and we sued them."

Laird, of Educational Communications, warned of pseudo who's who publishers who ask students for $10 payments for books they never produce.

"There are some really schlocky who's who outfits," she warned.

Kuhn reverses trend, re-elected commissioner

MILWAUKEE (UPI) — Only a heartbeat away from losing his job, Bowie Kuhn recovered it with a spectacular pickup Thursday when he won over the New York Yankees and Texas Rangers to his side and was re-elected baseball commissioner for another seven-year term.

Customarily emotionless, the 48-year-old ramrod straight, Princeton-bred Kuhn did his best to mask his feelings over the startling overnight turn of events wherein he went to bed fired Wednesday night and woke up rehired Thursday morning.

Despite a brief exchange with Oakland owner Charley Finley, his most outspoken adversary, Kuhn couldn't conceal his obvious elation.

"Of course, there is a great feeling of satisfaction within me," he confessed.

Laughingly, he added: "I spent yesterday afternoon reading the want ads."

For a while, that looked like an excellent idea.

Kuhn came within a whisker of being ousted as commissioner Wednesday evening when four American League clubs — Oakland, Baltimore, Texas and the New York Yankees — all voted within their own league meeting not to extend his present seven-year contract, expiring Aug. 12, 1976.

Now all that was needed to fire Kuhn was a formal vote at Thursday's joint meeting of the American and National Leagues.

But then things began happening.

Kuhn supporters frantically started manning the phones in an effort to get at least one of the four anti-Kuhn owners to change their minds. Officials of both leagues knew there was absolutely no way of swaying either Finley or Orioles' owner Jerry Hefner. Their only hope was to convince either Brad Corbett, Texas' principal owner, or one of the many Yankees' owners.

Men like Walter O'Malley of the Los Angeles Dodgers, John Galbreath of the Pittsburgh Pirates, Donald Grant of the New York Mets, Bud Selig and Ed Fitzgerald of the Milwaukee Brewers and Dick O'Connell of the Boston Red Sox used all their friendly powers of persuasion.

The Yankees wavered first.

Finally, in the early hours of the morning, just before dawn, both the Yankees and the Rangers agreed to go along with Kuhn's rehiring and that was the way the final vote ended, 22-2, in favor of reelection.

Kuhn was hoping for a raise, but he will receive the same $150,000 a year, plus expenses he has been getting the past six years.

The formal action was taken during a joint meeting and Kuhn had the added satisfaction of making the announcement to the press himself.

He talked first about the fact that the franchise and player relations' issues were impossible to be resolved at the meetings here because of the time consumed over his reelection.

Then, in his usual icy tones, he said simply:

"With respect to the reelection of the commissioner, the vote was 22-2 at the joint meetings in favor of reelection. I might add the meeting took only 10 minutes, one of the shortest on record."

Questioned as to whether he had received a raise, he replied stonily:

"I have not discussed that."

Asked his reaction to the events which transpired the past 12 hours, Kuhn replied:

"Obscene! And you can look that up in the dictionary if you don't know what it means."

Finley was among those listening to Kuhn's remarks in one of the huge banquet rooms of the hotel where the two-day meetings were held.

When Kuhn had finished talking, the A's owner rose from his seat and walked toward the front of the room, not far from where the commissioner was standing and talking to a radio reporter.

"Gentlemen, I would like to address the press," Finley said. Kuhn bristled.

"Charley, you may leave my room if you wish to address them," he said heatedly. "Not here."

Finley turned beet-red.

"Thank you, commissioner," he said acidly. "That just shows some more of your class."

Striding briskly to another nearby room, Finley cleared his throat twice and then said:

"Gentlemen, I'm not embarrassed at all to state that the Oakland A's were one of two clubs that cast a vote not to reelect Bowie Kuhn as commissioner of baseball."

"I like to feel we all live in a democratic America. Everyone can vote as he chooses."

Stroudsburg needs an extra inning to beat Bangor

By JOE DeVIVO
Record Sports Writer

STROUDSBURG — Stroudsburg can be thankful its offense is a lot stronger than its defense. Otherwise its team would have been in deep trouble.

Stroudsburg's defense nearly threw away the ballgame Thursday night with three costly errors in the sixth inning, but the offense came back to score five seventh-inning runs which were not good enough to defeat Bangor, 8-3 in a Little League District 20 North Area semi-final contest.

The victory advanced Stroudsburg to the North Area final game at 5 p.m. Saturday against the winner of tonight's State Belt-West End game. Stroudsburg advanced to the semi-finals with a 2-1 triumph over Blue Mountain Thursday in the completion of Wednesday night's suspended game.

Stroudsburg's George Barton was cruising along with a 3-1 lead with two outs in the sixth when his team's fielding suddenly collapsed.

Bob Hawk, who had doubled with one out, came around to score on a fielding error by first baseman Russ Bardonex on Don Falcone's grounder which brought Bangor to within 3-2.

Pinch-hitter Scott Fraunfelder followed with another grounder to Bardonex and again it rolled past the first baseman as Falcone crossed the plate with the tying run.

Catcher Kerry Boyer made things worse for Stroudsburg when he fired the late relay throw to the plate past third baseman Craig Tretheway for another error.

The ball rolled all the way to the left field fence and Fraunfelder might easily have scored all the way from second with the winning run except for one thing. He tripped over second base.

Fraunfelder finally sat up and legged it to third, but was left there when Barton fanned Scott Tilton for his 13th strike-out of the ballgame.

Fortunately for Stroudsburg, its players were a lot better with their bats than with their gloves. The visitors hammered loser Alan Capobianco for four hits and five runs in the seventh to wrap up the victory.

Pinch-hitter Roger Kizer started the rally with an infield single to deep short, and before the inning was over, Bardonex redeemed himself with a run-scoring single, and Art Volpe, George Strunk, and Larry Smith came through with run-scoring base hits.

Barton, who didn't walk a batter and allowed just six hits, then breezed through the seventh to seal the victory.

Boyer staked his battery-mate Barton to a 1-0 lead in the second inning when he belted a 2-1 pitch over the center field fence for a home run.

The winners added another run in the third with the aid of some sloppy Bangor fielding. Shortstop Kirk Bellis let Barton's grounder go through his legs for a two-base error and Barton moved to third on a ground out.

Bardonex then tapped a weak grounder toward first and beat out a wide, late throw as Barton crossed the plate with an unearned run.

Hawk, who had two of Bangor's six hits, cut the Stroudsburg lead to 2-1 in the fourth with a homer over the right center field fence.

Stroudsburg added another run in the fifth on back-to-back doubles by Bardonex and Strunk and that looked as if it would be enough until the fireworks erupted in the Bangor sixth.

Ironically enough, Stroudsburg's defense helped kill a Bangor rally in the second inning with a double play. Bartron turned Fred Bruke's sharp grounder to the box into a 1-6-3 double play.

The twinkling turned out to save a run when Falcone followed with a triple down the right field line, but he was left stranded when Todd Jones lined sharply to second for the third out.

Bangor's only other serious threat came in the third when the first two batters, Rich Caracio and Dave Nagle beat out bunts for base hits.

But Barton bore down and got the next two batters on strikes and induced Capobianco to ground out to end the inning.

Unearned run in eighth beats Blue Mountain, 2-1

By JOE MIEGOC

Record Sports Editor
MOUNT BETHEL — Slate Belt and Blue Mountain waited 22 hours to play 19 minutes Thursday night.

Winning pitcher John Goffredo scored an unearned run in the top of the eighth Thursday to give Slate Belt a 2-1 victory over Blue Mountain in a District 20 North Little League tournament opening round game halted Wednesday night after seven innings due to darkness.

After Goffredo had scored on Blue Mountain catcher Kevin Flood's fifth passed ball of the game for a final margin of victory, Blue Mountain came back to get a pair of hits in its half of the eighth, putting two on with just one out.

But Chris Denardo's hard line drive to first was turned into an unassisted double play by Slate Belt's Mike Resh and the game was over.

Slate Belt now meets West End, a 5-2 winner over East Stroudsburg Wednesday night in another opening round game, at 6 p.m. today at East Stroudsburg, a semi-final contest leading to Saturday's North Area final at Slate Belt.

Ironically, Slate Belt's winning run came in a manner similar to its first run of the game, scored Wednesday night by Lloyd Vanderpool on a passed ball.

Goffredo led off the top of the eighth by reaching second when his bouncer to third slipped off Matt Pritchard's glove for a two-base error before left fielder John Gennusia could retrieve the ball.

Curt DePue struck out, but while he was batting, loser James Gum cut loose with his third wild pitch of the game and Goffredo took third.

Jeff Horn struck out looking, but Goffredo scored when Gum's first pitch to Brian Miller got through Flood and went to the backstop, Goffredo sliding in ahead of Flood's late tag attempt. Miller then singled to center, leaving it to guesswork whether the hit would have come with Goffredo still on base.

In its half of the inning, Blue Mountain mounted a threat to tie it again and extend the game further. Flood lined a single to center to lead off and remained at first as Goffredo struck out Gum.

Gary Houck then beat out a topped ball down the third base line, putting two runners on and Denardo coming to bat. He fouled off the first pitch, then lined the second straight at Resh, who caught it chest-high and beat Houck to the bag for the double play and the ballgame.

Slate Belt took the advantage in Wednesday's portion of the game, which was delayed that night in the top of the fourth by a 57-minute rain intermission. Vanderpool singled to deep short leading off the third, moved to second on a wild throw by Eric Case on the hit, third on a Gum wild pitch and scored on a Flood passed ball with DePue batting.

Blue Mountain's run was also tainted. Phil Racciato walked with two out and was safely steaming to third on a single to right by Joe Gennusia, pinch-hitting for Jim Snyder. Vanderpool threw to third trying to cut Racciato down and threw wild, Racciato scoring the tying run.

Both Goffredo and Gum allowed four hits, with all three runs in the game being unearned. Goffredo struck out Gum in the eighth inning to record his eighth strike out, while Gum's pair of strike outs in the eighth left him with 16 for the game.

New Ali punches, balloon & needle

NEW YORK (UPI) — There were eight men in space Thursday, three American astronauts, four Russian cosmonauts — and Muhammad Ali.

The astronauts and cosmonauts go there now and then, but Ali lives in orbit.

While the historic space

Cowboys deal Hayes to 49ers

linkup was going on, Ali was in an orbit of his own, firing the first rockets for his title defense against Joe Frazier in Manila on Oct. 1.

At a breakfast atop a 69-story building in midtown, the champion announced that two "new" punches would be used to whip Frazier in this, their third fight.

"I will use the balloon and the needle," Ali babbled. "You saw how I made a balloon of Joe's face before. This time my left jab will be the balloon, blowing up his face, and my right, pop-pop, will be the needle to bust the balloon."

It will not be the "balloon" and "needle" alone though, he promised. He had come in waving a small-sized butterfly net which he would give to Frazier. "I'm gonna dance all night," he said, "and I'm gonna float like a butterfly, and Joe, he's gonna need a net to catch me, right?"

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Wide receiver Bob Hayes, a double gold medal winner in the 1964 Olympics when he was billed as the world's fastest human, and a 10-year National Football League veteran, Thursday was acquired by the San Francisco 49ers from the Dallas Cowboys in exchange for an undisclosed high draft choice.

Hayes, 32, was a seventh round future draft selection of the Cowboys in 1963, but did not play in the NFL until after the Olympics in Tokyo. In his 10 seasons, Hayes, who lost his starting job to Drew Pearson in 1974, scored more points than any other Dallas player in the team's history.

SEE WHAT YOU CAN GET FOR

CAUGHT ...
ARRESTED ...
PROSECUTED ...
FINED ...
JAILED ...
MARKED!

The price tag says $2.98. That isn't much, is it? The store will never miss it. If some "friend" dares you to take it, what's the harm? It's all in fun, isn't it?

Shoplifting is stealing, and stealing is a crime. Stealing something marked $2.98 is the same, in principle, as stealing $20 from somebody's pocket—or stealing $2,000 from a bank. There's just no such thing as a little theft.

The store will miss it. Little by little, petty shoplifting mounts up to big losses... and forces prices up. Shoplifting adds millions of dollars to the cost of living, each year.

What's the harm? That little price mark, on a stolen item, can mark you for life. When you're caught shoplifting — and sooner or later, you will be caught — you may be arrested, prosecuted, fined, jailed.

Even if you're placed on probation, you're still marked with a police record—a record that can follow you all your life and ruin your chances for college, jobs, professions or any career.

Before you take a dare, think it over. Your future could depend on it.

Ann Landers

Perfect wife

Dear Ann Landers: You asked for letters describing The Perfect Husband and printed the best one. Now how about printing a letter from a male describing the Perfect Wife?

1. She is kind and considerate and sensitive to my emotional needs.

2. I can communicate with her freely on any subject and trust her never to make me feel uncomfortable — or tell anyone what I said.

3. She is willing to accept me as I am and not try to make me over in the image of the man of her dreams.

4. She is big enough to admit it when she is wrong.

5. This woman is completely mine and I never have to worry about her slipping around behind my back, no matter what the circumstances.

Her qualifications as a bed-mate are secondary, but she happens to be exciting and keeps our love ever new. I'm a lucky fellow because the woman I've described is my wife. Perhaps this letter will serve as an inspiration to others. —

Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Georgia Peach: Lovely! I'm happy for you both.

Dear Ann Landers: My problem is a delicate one and I'm completely at a loss as to how to solve it.

I'm an 18-year-old girl who has trouble with my grandfather. He paws me. As a child, I hugged and kissed him and sat on his lap. I don't mind his arm around me if he would just keep it off my behind. If he wants to hold my hand, fine, but I get mad when he "accidentally" brushes it against my breast.

How do I tell him to cool it without coming right out and speaking my mind? I can't let this continue, even if he is harmless. I'm beginning to dread every visit. —

Nix On The Grand-Paw

Dear Nix: I hesitate to suggest that Gramps is a dirty old man, but you wouldn't have written had the thought not crossed your mind.

With a big smile, tell Gramps, "I'm a big girl now. No more fondling me like I was four." If you should feel a hand in the wrong place after your little speech, lift it off and say, "Remember what I said . . . and DON'T smile when you say it."

Dear Ann Landers: I was having coffee with a friend recently and she was being very critical of a mutual acquaintance who was suffering from depression. Mrs. X kept repeating, "I don't feel sorry for Rita. She could snap out of it if she really wanted to."

In the meantime Mrs. X was lighting one cigaret off the other, choking and coughing, her hands trembling as she struggled to hold the coffee cup.

Finally I said, "Why don't YOU stop smoking? It's killing you and you know it."

Mrs. X became furious because of the unspoken comparison. Am I THAT far off base? How about it, Ann? —

Straight Talk In Detroit

Dear S.T.: A person who is that hooked on tobacco is in as bad shape emotionally as one who is in a state of depression. Both have lost control of their lives.

Dear Ann Landers: Why would a man who is "over the hill" (and I mean completely impotent) talk about nothing but sex whenever we are out in company? He doesn't know any clean jokes. Only dirty ones. Of course I am describing my husband.

Sometimes I get so embarrassed I'd like to drop through the floor.

P.S. He doesn't drink. What's the matter with him?

Tomato Face

Dear Face: Talk can be a substitute for performance — and hopefully for the talker, a smoke screen. Sometimes an extremely patient and understanding wife can reverse the situation. I also recommend counseling.

Erma Bombeck

Duel-logue

For years, my husband has been intrigued with the studies of Abraham Kaplan, a professor of philosophy, who is concerned with a society where "everybody talks and nobody listens."

Professor Kaplan coined his own word for it. He calls it "Duologue" and says it takes place in schools, churches, cocktail parties and especially in Congress.

"Be honest," said my husband, "when I talk, you are not only not listening to what I say, but you are thinking of what you are going to say next. Like if I said I had read a good book lately you would be . . ."

"Hey," I interrupted, "did you hear about Irene Morstahl? She bought 'Fear Of Flying' and thought it was the story of the Wright Brothers. Go ahead, dear, with whatever you were saying."

"You see! You weren't listening," he said.

"Of course I was listening. How else would I have tied in my funny book story?"

"Women are always complaining their husbands never talk to them. They talk to them all right, women just don't listen. That's why you get things so screwed up when you repeat them."

"Look, just because I could not remember if you stayed home Saturday to get the lawn sprayed and the dog spayed, or the lawn spaded and the dog sprayed is no big deal. It's very confusing to begin with."

"Do you know what Professor Kaplan says? He says the perfect 'duologue' is two TV sets tuned in and facing each other."

"Which reminds me," I said, "what time is it? There's a Maude rerun I want to watch. Keep talking . . . I'm listening."

He reached over and took me by the shoulders and looked at me squarely. "You are going to learn how to listen."

"How can I listen if you keep talking all the time?" I said irritably.

"There's a party coming up this weekend. We are not going to say anything. We are going to wander in and out of conversations and listen. Do you understand that?" (I nodded.)

At the party, I attached myself to a speaker who looked like a shorter Woody Allen. He was discussing how a rattle in his car turned out to be two empty soda bottles in the trunk which had absolutely mystified eight mechanics. At the end of (check one) 15 minutes, an hour and a half, three days I said to him, "That is really interesting."

He said, "If I had known it was that interesting, I'd have listened myself."

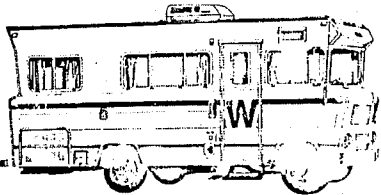

Let's hear it out there for the Duologue.

ABOUT AN EPICUREAN SAFARI ...
Dining at "Selecta," 6 miles south of Stroudsburg, is like going to a private party abroad. The yellow sign on Rt. 191 reads only:
"SELECTA (215) 588-1042 Rijstafel." A shale driveway leads through woods to a field-stone mansion, the parking lot studded with out-of-state cars.

The host, a spice-importer from Java, introduces the gourmets in the oak-beamed Rattan Bar. Except for stubborn martini-drinkers, most enjoy the "Selecta," exotic-blue House Specialty. The restaurant features an authentic Indonesian Rice-Table buffet on Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings, by reservation only. Other cuisine may be ordered ahead.
Private parties of 8 or more on other days. Phone for mailing of information/menu card.
